Mr. M. Patanjali Sastry, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main question argued in this second appeal is whether the contract entered into by the guardian of a minor for the sale of immoveable property belonging to the minor could be specifically enforced. The plaintiff contracted to buy a portion of the minor's property for Rs. 1,150. Two months after, the property was sold for Rs. 1,500 to the third defendant. The plaintiff has brought the suit for the purpose of enforcing specific performance of the contract in his favour and the 3rd defendant resists the suit. The District Munsif gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff and the Subordinate Judge has reversed the judgment and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The question in this case is whether the contract by the guardian on behalf of the minor could be specifically enforced. Mr. Patanjali Sastry who appears for the appellant relies upon the case reported in Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (1). In that case the opinion of the majority was that no decree should be passed against the minor's estate on a contract entered into on his behalf by the guardian under which covenant no charge is created on the estate except in cases in which the minor's estate would have been liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which he is subject. In this case the minor is a Hindu and the guardian is his mother. The contract to sell a portion of the property was in discharge of a debt incurred by the father. The question whether she could sell a portion of the property of the minor for discharging a debt due by the minor's father has to be decided with reference to Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (1). It is urged on behalf of the respondent that the question of necessity has not been gone into. The third defendant, who contested the suit, did not raise the question as to the necessity for the sale. Evidently it did not suit his purpose to raise such a question for, he himself is a purchaser from the guardian, and so he cannot now reasonably complain that the question of necessity was not gone into. As it was not, specifically raised in the pleadings, the District Munsif rightly disallowed the question as to necessity. The Subordinate Judge based his decision mainly relying upon the decisions referred to in Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (1). Whatever may be the effect of those decisions, I am bound to follow the decision reported as Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (1). According to that decision a decree could be passed in certain circumstances against the minor on a contract entered into by the guardian. The contract in favour of the plaintiff is not impeached on the ground of fraud or collusion or on any other ground which would be a proper defence to an action of this kind. The respondent's Vakil urged that this is not a case for specific performance and no specific performance of the contract should be given when the estate of the minor is likely to suffer, and his contention was that as the 3rd defendant was able to pay a better price the contract in favour of the plaintiff should not be enforced, and he relied upon Chhitar Mal v. Jagannath Prasad (2). In that case, the learned Judge has held that it was not proper that specific performance of a contract should be granted in a case where the minor's estate was likely to suffer, but that case is no authority for refusing relief where there is a valid contract and at the time when such contract was made there were no circumstances which could invalidate it for the simple reason that somebody else is prepared to offer a better price. In a case reported in Lal Gopal Datta v. The Khoroornah Majozilla Zemin dary Syndicate Ltd. (3) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the case in Chhitar Mal v. Jagan Nath Prasad (2) was not an authority for holding that, when a valid agreement had been lawfully entered into on behalf of a minor and was to the minor's benefit, it could be repudiated if the guardian subsequently found he could obtain more. To hold that a Court should not grant specific performance of a valid contract if better terms are forthcoming would be putting a premium upon offers of a better price, a long time after the contract is entered into. I do not think that in this case the guardian acted against the interest of the minor at the time when the contract in favour of the plaintiff was entered into. If any evidence was forthcoming that the contract was not a proper contract, or that there were other circumstances which could in any way invalidate, or go to show that the minor's guardian was not acting as a free agent, certainly the Court would not be well advised in granting specific performance. But no such case was put forward either on behalf of the minor or on behalf of the third defendant.

In the result the second appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs throughout. The plaintiff will pay the whole of the price less Rs. 100 into Court within 14 days from to-day. If he fails to do so, his suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 1st December 1922, of the Court of the District Munsif, Periyakulam, on the plaint presented by the petitioner herein to the said Court.

Mr. N. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner's plaint was time-barred when the Court rose and he pursued the District Munsif to his club where he declined to receive it at 6-30 p. m. I am now asked to treat it as if he had received it because in the light of Din Ram v. Hari Das (1) and Sattaya Padayachi v. Soundrathachi (2) he might have received it.

This cannot be done. The District Munsif was within his discretion in refusing to receive a plaint at his club, and it is impossible to consider at this stage what might have happened if he had exercised his discretion in another way. The petition is dismissed.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss 3 (5), 6, 8—Kudivaramdar, acquisition of melwaram rights by—Kudivaram rights, if lost—"Land-holder," meaning of—Suit for possession—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts Appeal against the order, dated the 21st April 1922, of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in A. S. No. 20 of 1921 (preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Ramachandrapur, in O. S. No. 692 of 1917).

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Appellants

Mr. K. Srinivasa Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, the Subordinate Judge held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit but only the Revenue Court had. The suit was for the recovery of possession of certain properties on the strength of a lease alleged to have been given orally to the first defendant by the second plaintiff. The defendant denied the lease and claimed occupancy rights in the lands and also pleaded that the plaintiff as inamdar was a land-holder within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act; and, therefore, the suit could not be tried by the Civil Court. The Subordinate Judge decided on the first part of issue No 3 that the suit is a dharmilla inam and that finding we must accept. He then considered himself bound by the ruling of the Full Bench, reported as Jurugumilli Brahmayya v. Chellaghal Achiraju (1) to hold that the plaintiff as a dharmilla inamdar was a land-holder within the meaning of the Act, and, therefore, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try this suit and he directed the plaint to be returned to the proper Court. It is pointed out to us that the plaintiffs' case was that they owned the kudivaram interest to start with in this land and that it was only subsequently that they obtained by grant the melwaram interest from the zemindar. It was argued that when a kudivaramdar gets by transfer or otherwise the melwaram interest in the land, the kudivaramdar does not lose his kudivaram interest thereby, and the persons who were in occupation of the lands as tenants under him as kudivaramdar do not become rayats and do not get kudivaram rights automatically transferred to them by the transfer of melwaram rights to the original kudivaramdar. The Full Bench case referred to is sought to be distinguished from the present case on this ground. In the Full Bench case, the transfer was of both the varams simultaneously to the grantee and the question arose whether under those circumstances the suit by the grantee for rent should be tried by the Revenue Court or the Civil Court. The question depended upon whether he was a land-holder within the meaning of the Act or not. The majority of the Judges held that in the circumstances he was a land-holder.

Here we have a different case put forward by the plaintiff, namely, a case of the transfer of melwaram to a person who already owned the kudivaram right. If the plaintiff was a kudivaramdar to start with before the melwaram right was transferred to him his position is different from the position of the parties in the Full Bench case. The Subordinate Judge has not considered the question whether the plaintiff's allegation, that he was a kudivaramdar to start with is true or not. The District Munsif discussed the question and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's allegation was true. That finding of the District Munsif has not been displaced by the Subordinate Judge. We must, therefore, for the purpose of this appeal assume that the plaintiff was a kudivaramdar before he got the melwaram interest. In such circumstances we are of opinion that the ruling in the Full Bench case above cited will not apply. The Estates Land Act itself in the Explanation to section 6 recognises that a person owning a right of occupancy already in the land does not lose it subsequently by getting the interest of the land-holder in the lands. No doubt, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Oldfield in the Full Bench case there is some difficulty in reconciling this Explanation with section 8. We must take it that section 8 must be read subject to the Explanation in section 6. A question similar to the one before us arose before another Full Bench in this Court, on a former occasion in Marina Veeraswamy v. Bayinapalli Venkatrayudu (2). It was held by that Full Bench of five Judges that a person who was already the owner of a kudivaram right and to whom the zemindar granted the melwaram subsequently is not a person holding an estate or part thereof and is also not a person entitled to collect the rent by virtue of a transfer from the owner of his predecessor-in-title within the meaning of section 3 (5) of the Estates Land Act, and, therefore, he did not acquire the status of a land-holder in consequence of the grant by the zemindar and his suit was maintainable in the ordinary Civil Court against his tenants for recovery of rent.

(2) 57 Ind. Cas. 778, 39 M. L. J. 225; 12 L. W. 51; 28 M. L. T. 458 (F. B.).

The authority of that Full Bench is still subsisting and it has not been overruled by any subsequent Full Bench of this High Court. We must, therefore, hold that the Subordinate Judge was not right in disposing of this case without going into the question whether the plaintiff owned the kudivaram interest before the melwaram was granted to him. If he finds that the plaintiff had no kudivaram interest at all, that he became an inamdar solely by virtue of the grant made by the zemindar of melwaram rights, his view that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in the Civil Court would be right, but if, on the other hand, he comes to the conclusion, as the Munsif has done, that the plaintiffs owned the kudivaram interest before they became entitled to the melwaram by the grant by the zemindar, the Full Bench case in Marina Veeraswamy v. Boyinapalli Venkatrayudu (2), already referred to, will apply and the present case will have to be tried by the Civil Court. In the latter case the Subordinate Judge will consider the other issues in the case and dispose of the appeal himself. In the former case the order returning the plaint would be re-affirmed. We, therefore, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal to him to be disposed of in the light of the observations made above. Costs will abide and follow the result of the appeal. The Court fee paid for the appeal in this Court will be refunded to the appellant.

One H applied under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act for an order requiring the Returning Officer to accept his nomination paper for election to the Bengal Legislative Council and reject that of his rival candidate M. The application having been rejected H appealed but during the pendency of the appeal the Returning Officer declared M to be duly elected.

Held, (1) that inasmuch as it was open to H to contest the election of M by an election petition, he had another specific and adequate legal remedy, and the Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to make an order under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page

I need not deal with the first Rule which was issued, because, as I understand, that was discharged by my learned brother Mr. Justice Cuming, who thereupon issued another Rule. That Rule was issued on the 15th of October 1923. The Rule called upon Mr S. N. Mallik and the Returning Officer to show cause why the Returning Officer should not accept the nomination paper of Surendra Nath Halder and include the name of the said Surendra Nath Halder in the list of valid nominations which he was preparing and why he should not reject the nomination paper of the said S. N. Mallik and exclude his name from the list of valid nominations and, why, they should not pay to the said Surendra Nath Halder his costs.

Mr. Justice Cuming, as we have been informed, made an ad interim injunction restraining the Returning Officer from preparing the list or from taking any further steps in the election.

The Rule was heard by my learned brother Mr. Justice Page on the 29th of October. He reserved judgment and continued the ad interim injunction until the date of delivery of his judgment. On the 2nd of November by his judgment he discharged the Rule and set aside the ad interim injunction.

This is an appeal from that judgment. The facts which it is necessary for me to state for the purpose of my judgment are as follows. These two gentlemen Mr S. N. Halder and Mr. S. N. Mullik desired to be candidates for a particular seat in the election for the Bengal Legislative Council. Mr. Halder presented his nomination paper on the 8th of October 1923. The nomination paper contains a paragraph which is to be filled in by the Returning Officer as follows: "This nomination paper was delivered to me in my office at (date and hour ...)." The Returning Officer filled in the date and hour and signed his own name. In the presence of the Returning Officer Mr. Halder signed what is called "declaration by candidate" which runs as follows: "I hereby declare that I agree to this nomination." Mr. Halder signed that declaration on the 8th of October last in the presence of the Returning Officer. He did not fill in the date upon which he signed the declaration. When the time came for investigating the validity of the nomination papers, namely, on the 11th of October 1923, a point was taken by or on behalf of Mr. Mallik that the nomination paper of Mr. Halder was not valid because the declaration signed by Mr. Halder did not bear a date, though, as I have said, he signed it on the 8th October actually in the presence of the Returning Officer. The Returning Officer decided that the ground that the declaration of Mr. Halder did not bear a date, was sufficient to invalidate the nomination paper and he rejected the nomination paper of Mr Halder

It is not necessary for me to express any opinion as to whether the Returning Officer's decision on this point was a correct decision or not and I express no opinion in respect thereof. The point has not been argued before us and it would not be right for me in any shape or form to express an opinion thereon.

Mr. Halder apparently took an objection to Mr. Mallik's nomination paper. The argument in respect of that objection has not been elaborated in this Court but I understand that the ground was that Mr. Mallik was a Government Official. The Returning Officer, as I have been informed, came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to decide that question and accepted Mr. Mallik's nomination paper.

After the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page was delivered on the 2nd of November by which, as I have already stated, he discharged the Rule and dissolved the injunction, the Returning Officer under rule 14 (2) of the Bengal Electoral Rules declared Mr. Mallik to be elected. Rule 14 (2) runs as follows "If the number of such candidates is equal to the number of vacancies, all such candidates shall be declared to be duly elected." The result of the Returning Officer's rejecting Mr. Halder's nomination paper and accepting Mr. Mallik's nomination paper was that there was one vacancy and one candidate; and, therefore, on the 2nd November, after Mr. Justice Page's judgment had been delivered, he declared Mr Mallik to be elected. Under date the 5th November this notice appears in the Gazette. "It is hereby notified in pursuance of rule 14 (9) of the rules for the election and nomination of members to the Bengal Legislative Council that Mr. Surendra Nath Mallik has been declared under rule 14(2) of the aforesaid rules to have been duly elected by the Calcutta South (Non-Muhammadian) Constituency to be a member of the Bengal Legislative Council."

These are the facts which, in my judgment, it is necessary for me to state.

In my judgment this appeal must be dismissed on the following grounds:—

The application, upon which the Rule was founded, was made under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. It is not necessary for me to refer at any length to the provisions of that section as they are all well known and there have been many decisions in this Court in respect thereof. It is sufficient for me to say, in the first place, that the jurisdiction which is given to the Court under that section is a discretionary jurisdiction; and, in the second place, that jurisdiction is limited by the provisos and exemptions which are set out in the section. I desire to refer to three of these, viz., (d), (e) and (h). The section provides that the Court may "make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forbore ... by any person holding a public office..... provided, (d) that the applicant has no other specific and adequate legal remedy, and (e) that the remedy given by the order applied for will be complete" and one of the exemptions from such power is as follows:—

(h) "Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any High Court to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force." It has been admitted by the learned Counsel, who argued this case, that it will be open to his client to present an election petition based upon the allegations upon which he now relies. It seems to me, therefore, that the applicant has another specific and adequate legal remedy.

Further, it seems to me that if we were to allow this appeal and make the order, which my learned brother was asked to make and direct that the Returning Officer should accept Mr. Halder's nomination paper, the remedy, which we should be able to give would not be complete because we have no power in these proceedings to set aside the election which has been declared and the result might be to reduce these proceedings to an absurdity inasmuch as we should be directing the Returning Officer to receive the nomination paper of Mr. Halder after he has declared Mr. Mallik to be duly elected—a declaration, with which this Court in these proceedings has no jurisdiction to interfere.

There is a further ground, namely, that by rule 31 of the Bengal Electoral Rules and Regulations it is provided that "no election shall be called in question except by an election petition presented in accordance with the provisions of this part." The learned Counsel has admitted that that rule may be said to be "a law for the time being in force" and one of the exemptions from the provisions of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, as I have stated, is that "nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any High Court to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force."

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Richardson, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Construction

The question whether a statement by a debtor is an acknowledgment of debt within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act is one that has to be considered on the merits and having regard to the exact language used.

A statement by a debtor was as follows:—"The debt due to the creditor K B was a mortgage debt. It ripened into a decree. He gave me a letter that he would proceed against the mortgaged properties only and would not proceed against my person." At the end were these words, "these debts were due by me along with others but they were paid by me alone. I, therefore, owe no debts to any of my creditors."

Held, that the statement only meant there was no claim against the person of the deponent but there was a clear admission of the existence of a debt which amounted to an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19, Limitation Act.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Lakshmanan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge of Kistna at Masulipatam in Appeal Suit No 327 of 1920 preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore in Execution Petition No. 92 of 1919 in Original Suit No 80 of 1910.

The sole point for determination in this appeal is whether the learned District Judge has correctly held that the statement made by the appellant, Exhibit A, amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, so as to save the bar of limitation.

The statement is as follows:—"The debt due to the creditor, K. Bavasa Reddi was a mortgage debt. It ripened into a decree. It was in Original Suit No 80 of 1910 on the file of the Ellore Sub-Court. He gave me a letter that he would proceed against the mortgaged properties only and would not proceed against my person."

At the end of the same statement he says "These debts are due by me along with others, but they were paid by me alone. I, therefore, owe no debts to any of my creditors."

There can be no doubt that this must mean that the debt is due to K. Bavasa Reddi, but inasmuch as he has undertaken to satisfy it by proceeding against the mortgaged properties only, there is no claim against the person of the appellant. And this is the sense in which it has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge and the learned District Judge. I agree with them that the deposition is a clear admission that the appellant was in debt to the plaintiff.

The appellant has cited three cases all of which can be distinguished, firstly Hingan Lal v. Mansa Ram (1). There the statement relied upon was merely the fact that the judgment-debtor had been declared liable to pay a certain sum of money by a certain decree. There was no statement that the debt was due. So too in Muthu Kumara Mudaliar v. Chockalinga Mudaliar (2), the statement is "I am the 3rd defendant. I and the 2nd defendant purchased some land from the 1st defendant. For the balance of price due to her, Exhibit A was executed." It is not stated that any debt under Exhibit A was still due.

And lastly in Kandasami Reddi v. Suppammal (3), the passage runs thus:—"The first plaintiff and his brother, the second plaintiff, namely, Suppa Reddy, jointly executed to him (first defendant) on the said date an hypothecation deed for Rs 200 after deducting the sums paid towards the said othi amount of Rs. 275. Along with the said deed, the deed of othi executed in the year 1888, and the othi deed of 1907 were also given to the first defendant." Again there is no admission that any debt under these deeds was due.

The rulings lay down that each case is to be considered on its merits and having regard to the exact language used, I have no doubt that in this case there is an acknowledgment of debt and hence no bar of limitation.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

There is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family and is not her stridhan property. [p. 937, col. 1]

As benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction may suffice for the purpose [p. 937, col. 2].

Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh, 14 I. A. 127, 15 C. 20, 11 Ind. Jur. 474, 5 Sar. P. C. J. 71, Rafique & Jackson's P. O. No. 98, 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 599 (P. O.) and Muhammad Mahtub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu, 53 Ind. Cas. 54, 23 C. W. N. 321, (1919) M. W. N. 507 (P. O.), followed.

The person who impugns the apparent character of a transaction must not rely, however, solely on probabilities. He must show something definite to establish that it is a sham transaction, on the principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person who claims contrary to the tenor of a deed and alleges that the apparent is not the real state of things [p. 938, col. 1].

The Code of Civil Procedure does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings, and there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative. A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent; so, a defendant may raise, by his statement of defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and, therefore, inconsistent, defences as he may think proper [p. 940, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Perganahs, dated the 16th February 1922.

Babu Harendra Kumar Sarbadhikari, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third, fourth and fifth defendants in a suit for partition of joint family properties. The relationship of the parties may be gathered from the following genealogical table —

The founder of the family, Digambar Kasyapi, left two sons, Nabin and Rasik. Nabin amassed a considerable fortune and died on the 21st November 1899. He left a widow Bhubanmohini and six sons. One of them, Behari, died leaving two sons, Rajani and Sajani. Another son, Makhan, died on the 20th September 1918, leaving a widow, Kumudbala, who had been married to him for thirty years. It is common ground that the sons of Nabin formed a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga Law. On the 31st March 1919, Kumudbala, the widow of Makhan, instituted the present suit for partition of the joint family estate. Her mother-in-law Bhubanmohini was joined at the first defendant; her surviving brothers-in-law were the next four defendants; and the sons of her deceased brother-in-law were two other defendants. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit on the 16th February 1922 and made a preliminary decree, awarding the plaintiff a share of specified properties and giving various incidental directions. The present appeal was lodged in this Court by three of the defendants on the 7th June 1922. During the pendency of the appeal, the first defendant Bhubanmohini died on the 24th December 1922. We have heard the appeal on the record and without a printed paper-book, because the parties found themselves in a position of considerable embarrassment, owing to the inability of the Receiver in charge of the estate to collect sufficient funds for the conduct of the litigation. The facts have been placed before us in detail by Mr. Sarbadhikari who has argued the case on behalf of the Appellants very fully and we have also looked into the record for ourselves.

The preliminary decree made by the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that the properties which stand in the name of Bhubanmohini should have been regarded as her self-acquisition and not as part of the family estate liable to be partitioned, secondly, that if the properties which stand in the name of Bhubanmohini are found to have been acquired, not from her own funds but with the money of her husband, they should have been regarded as given to her in absolute right; and, thirdly, that the Subordinate Judge should not have made an order on the defendants for discovery of joint properties other than those included in the suit.

BHUBANMOHINI DAS V. KUMUD BALA DAS.

As regards the first point, reference has been made to eight conveyances, dated 26th January 1873 for Rs. 50, 1st May 1887 for Rs. 400, 5th November 1888 for Rs. 150, 15th September 1891 for Rs. 300, 9th November 1892 for Rs. 475, 27th July 1898 for Rs. 112, 14th August 1898 for Rs. 16 and 1st October 1898 for Rs. 200. The properties acquired under these documents are claimed by the plaintiff as included in the family estate though they all stand in the name of Bhubanmohini. Bhubanmohini, on the other hand, maintained that the consideration in each instance was paid by her, and the properties formed her exclusive stridhan. In this, she was supported by three of her sons, the present appellants. Another son, however, the second defendant and the two grandsons, the sixth and seventh defendants, disputed her allegation, and supported the plaintiff. It may be observed in passing that originally one written statement was filed on behalf of all the defendants jointly, but, later on, the second, sixth and seventh defendants stated that they had no knowledge of the written statement and took up a position hostile to that maintained by the third, fourth and fifth defendants. This dissension among the defendants has undoubtedly tended to weaken their opposition to the claim put forward by the plaintiff.

Before the evidence is examined, we may usefully recall that as pointed out by the Judicial Committee more than once, there is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family and is not her stridhan property, Diwan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh v. Inderpal Singh (1), Dharani Kant Lahiri Chowdhry v. Kristo Kumari Chowdhry (2), Chowdhry v. Tariny Kanth Lahiry Chowdhry (3) which had disapproved of Bindoo Bashinee Debee

v. Pearee Mohun Bose (4) and Thakro v. Ganga Parsad (5). The same principle will be found recognised and applied in Narayana v. Krishna (6), Narasimma Ammal v. Srinivasa Ragava Iyengar (7), Bai Motivahoo v. Purshotam Dayal (8), Durga Prasad Sinha v. Prankrishna Sinha (9) and Protap Chandra Gope v. Sarat Chandra Gangopadhyaya (10). The rule thus enunciated must be coupled with the elementary principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person who asserts that the apparent is not the real state of things. It is important to bear in mind in this class of cases that, as pointed out by Lord Phillimore in Maniklal Mansukbar v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (11), the decision of the Court should rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. This recalls the earlier pronouncements to the same effect by Lord Westbury in Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (12) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (13). But we are not unmindful that, in the words of Lord Hobhouse in Uman Pershad v. Gandharp Singh (14) and of Lord Shaw in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (15), as benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction may suffice for the purpose. The person who impugns its apparent character must not rely, however, solely on probabilities, as Lord Buckmaster observed in Irshad Ali v. Kariman (16). He must show something definite to establish that it is a sham transaction, on the principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person, who claims contrary to the tenor of a deed and alleges that the apparent is not the real state of things: Nawab Azimat Ali Khan v. Hardwarec Mull (17), Faez Buksh Chowdhury v. Fukeeroodeen Mahomed Ahasun Chowdhury (18), Suleiman Kadr Bahadur v. Mehndi Begum (19), Nirmal Chunder Banerjee v. Mahomed Siddik (20) and Moti Lal v. Kundan Lal (21). The most important test to be applied in these cases is, as observed by Mr. Ameer Ali in Nrityamoni Das v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (22), the source whence the consideration came. Sir George Farwell formulated the same test in different language, when he observed in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (23), that where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another person, the principle applies that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Parbati Das v. Baikuntha Nath Das (24), which recalls the earlier pronouncements by Lord Campbell in Dhurn Dass Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (25), and by Knight Bruce, L. J., in Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gangapersaud Gosain (26). Where, however, from the lapse of time; direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming, as to the payment of consideration, the case must be dealt with on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from proved or admitted facts. Sir Arthur Wilson emphasised this when he observed in Dalip Singh v. Chaudhain Nawal Kunwar (27), that if the evidence on neither side is wholly convincing as to the fundamental criterion, namely, the source of the purchase money, if the evidence given and withheld is open to adverse criticism, the Court must rely on the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties and their relation to one another, the motives which could govern their actions and their subsequent conduct, including their dealings with or enjoyment of the disputed property, see Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag (28). We must further look to the substance of the transaction as evidenced in the deeds of the parties, not permitting the real question to be obscured by what Knight Bruce, L. J. calls in Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Koonwerce (29), the form of expression, the literal sense, nor by what Lord Macnaghten describes in Lal Achal

BHUBANMOHINI DASI v. KUMUDBALA DASI.

Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (30), as exhibitions of the art of the conveyancer in the shape of recitals of obviously untrue statements introduced to impart some additional solemnity to an instrument: Promode Kumar Roy v. Kali Mohan Saha Pramanik (31), Lalit Mohan Sen v. Manoranjan Ghosh Chaudhuri (32) and Jasoda Lal Pal v. Balaram Poddar (33). The same view was recently emphasised by Lord Atkinson in Arab Ali Khan v. Mahmud Ali Khan (34), and by Lord Phillimore in Radha Krishna v. Bisheshwar Sahay (35). In the case before us, it was asserted by Bhubanmohini that she had her own private funds which enabled her to purchase the disputed and other properties. She alleged that she had received Rs. 100 from her father and Rs. 500 from her maternal grand-mother and that she used to carry on a money-lending business. She was eighty years old when her deposition was taken in 1921. She could give no indication as to the time or occasion of the alleged gifts; nor were any accounts produced of the alleged money-lending business. No independent witness was brought forward to corroborate her story. On the other hand, witnesses for the plaintiff asserted that neither the paternal nor the maternal relations of Bhubanmohini were well-to-do people who were likely to have made gifts of money to her; this much is plain that those families and their properties, if any, have completely disappeared. As against this, we have the undisputed fact that Nabin, the husband of Bhubanmohini, prospered in life and acquired considerable sums of money;

and there is no question that during the period of acquisition of the disputed properties in the name of Bhubanmohini the requisite funds could have been provided by her husband. On this state of the evidence, the Subordinate Judge declined to believe the story that Bhubanmohini possessed any stridhan obtained from her paternal and maternal relations and provided the requisite sum from such separate fund. The Subordinate Judge has also pointed out that on the 8th March 1910 and 2nd May 1917, the third defendant, Amrita, who now supports the story of his mother, executed mortgages of the disputed properties on the allegation that they belonged to his father. This defendant, at any rate, has not treated the property as the stridhan of his mother; although it is not clear that she was aware of these transactions. We may add that upon the question of possession, the evidence is ambiguous. The properties were managed by Nabin, and, after his death, by his sons. This, however, would not necessarily militate against the theory that they belonged to Bhubanmohini, for in the case of a pardanashin lady her estate might, in the normal course of events, be looked after by her husband or her sons. But it is important to bear in mind that there is no reliable evidence to show that the income was actually enjoyed by Bhubanmohini. On the whole, we are of opinion that the evidence as to the source of the consideration money and the treatment and possession of the disputed properties amply justifies the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that they were not the self-acquisitions of Bhubanmohini. In this connection, we may recall the observations of Lord Buckmaster in Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (36). "In appeals the burden of showing that the judgment appealed from is wrong lies upon the appellant. If all he can show is nicely balanced calculations which lead to the equal possibility of the judgment on either the one side or the other being right, he has not succeeded." It is not necessary to invoke this doctrine against the appellant, because, for reasons that have already been stated, the case set up by them fails, nevertheless, the fact that the Trial Judge has disbelieved the story narrated by the first defendant, is a factor which cannot altogether be ignored. The first point urged by the appellants must consequently fail.

As regards the second point, the plaintiff-respondent has urged that the theory of advancement was not put forward in the Trial Court and should not be entertained here. It cannot be seriously disputed that the alternative position taken up by the appellants contradicts the case attempted to be established by evidence before the Subordinate Judge. The contesting defendants have hitherto maintained that the disputed properties were purchased by the lady with her own money. They now turn round and contend that the properties were acquired by her husband with his own money but in her name, because he intended to make an absolute gift of them in her favour. It may be conceded that the Code of Civil Procedure does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings, and that there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative. A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent, so, a defendant may raise, by his statement of defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and, therefore, inconsistent, defences as he may think proper. This is fully established by the decision of the Full Bench in Narendra Nath Barari v. Abhoy Charan Chattopadhyaya (37), and illustrations of the application of this doctrine to inconsistent claims by the plaintiff may be found in Mati Lal Poddar v. Judhustir Das (38) and Official

Assignee of the Calcutta High Court v. Bidyasundari Dasi (39) and to conflicting defences by the defendant may be gathered from Purnendu Narain Roy v. Dwijendra Narain Roy (40) and Sri Rang Behary Lal v. Ranchheyya Lal (41). But, as was emphasised in some of these cases, the litigant who avails himself of the right to press inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, plainly places himself in peril and may find himself entangled in inextricable difficulty, for evidence adduced in support of two absolutely inconsistent cases, which are mutually destructive, can hardly be expected to secure confidence. Apart from this, there is no valid answer to the objection of the plaintiff-respondent that she cannot now be called upon to meet a case which was not put forward in the Trial Court. Whether the husband of the first defendant intended to make a gift of the properties to her or took the conveyances in her name so as to make her only the ostensible owner, is largely a question of intention. The facts relevant for the determination of this question of intention have not been explored. We cannot overlook that there are numerous instances of cases in the reports where purchases in the name of female members have led to controversies—whether the acquisition was for the benefit of the lady or of the person who found the money, see Ram Narain v. Muhammad Hadi (42), Muhammad Mahbub. Ali Khan v. Bhagrat Indu (15), Basar Khan v. Leakat Hossain (43) and Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhani Chander Sen (22). In this connection, it is important to bear in mind that, as emphasised by Sir George Farwell in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (23), the doctrine of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India [Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud

Gosain (26)], but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. This was apparently overlooked in Abdul Rahiman v. Mirathayar Ammal (44). But, the true position was clearly recapitulated by Lord Atkinson in Kerwick v. Kerwick (45), where he observed as follows:—

"It has been established by the decisions in the cases of Gopeckrasi Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (26) and Moulvie Sayyid Uzhur Ali v. Bebee Ulfat Fatima (46), that owing to the wide-spread and persistent practice which prevails amongst the natives of India, whether Muhammadan or Hindu, for owners of property to make grants and transfers of it benami for no obvious reason or apparent purpose, without the slightest intention of vesting in the donee any beneficial interest in the property granted or transferred, as well as the usages which these natives have adopted and which have been protected by Statute, no exception has ever been engrafted on the general law of India negating the presumption of the resulting trust in favour of the person providing the purchase money such as has, by the Courts of Chancery in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction, been engrafted on the corresponding law in England in those cases where a husband or father pays the money and the purchase is taken in the name of a wife or child. In such a case there is, under the general law in India, no presumption of an intended advancement as there is in England."

We are consequently of opinion that the appellants cannot possibly succeed on the second point, which was not urged in the Trial Court and which the plaintiff hitherto had no opportunity to controvert.

As regards the third point, there can be no doubt that the Subordinate Judge has properly made an order for discovery. All the joint properties, which belong to the family, must be included in the suit. The contesting defendants can gain no permanent advantage by the exclusion of any of the joint properties from this litigation. It is well-established that although co-owners cannot enforce a partition of a part only of the common lands, leaving the rest undivided, and although the entire property must be included in the partition, yet if, by mistake, fraud or like reason, or, by consent of the co-owners acting innocently and fairly, a partition of a portion only of their estate has been made, whether by order of the Court or otherwise, there is no reason why the Court should not subsequently grant a division of the remainder at the instance of one or more of the co-owners. The substance of the matter is that the effect of a decree in a partition suit leaves untouched the joint title and possession of the parties in the remainder; Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das (47). Consequently, it is to the interest of all parties concerned that all the joint properties should be ascertained and included in this suit, and any controversy as to whether a particular property alleged to be joint really possesses that character or not, must be determined before the preliminary decree is made. As was pointed out in Upendra Nath Banerjee v. Umesh Chandra Banerjee (48), Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kirpal Banerjee (49), and Tincowri Debi v. Suttja Doyal Banerji (50), all questions involving the title of the parties and their right to any relief within the issues, are judicial in character, and must be determined by the Court, such determination to be made ordinarily by the Court and incorporated in the interlocutory decree before any partition is made or directed. From this standpoint, the order for discovery made by the Subordinate Judge may be open to the criticism that it should have been made and carried out before the preliminary decree was passed. Such an objection, if taken, must be deemed unsubstantial; because, as explained in Annapurna Debya v. Amiyannath Banerjee (51), the Court has ample authority to direct successive trials of different issues and even to record interlocutory judgments thereon, to be made the basis of the final judgment at the conclusion of the trial of the whole case. There is thus no reason why we should not confirm the preliminary decree as made by the Subordinate Judge, and leave it open to him to make a supplemental preliminary decree in respect of such additional joint properties as the defendants may be compelled to discover on oath in pursuance of his order. The third point, like the first and the second, must consequently fail.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at fifteen gold mohurs.

The Receiver now in charge of the estate will continue (until otherwise directed by the Subordinate Judge) till the final decree for partition has been made.

The question of distribution of money in the hands of the Receiver will be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge.

Petition, under sections 115 of Act V. of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Chingleput, dated the 18th September 1922, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 3 of 1922, preferred against the order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, dated the 10th December 1921 in O. S. No. 218 of 1919, (O. S. No. 426 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvellore).

Mr. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Rajagopalan and Rajagopalan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In Original Suit No. 426 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvellore, plaintiff sued for Rs. 210 alleging that he held a lease of blacksmith's nam from the previous holder which had been continued by the present holders, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The other defendants Nos. 3 to 8 denied that these holders had title. The District Munsif and the District Judge on appeal have held that the jurisdiction vested in the Revenue Court, and the plaintiff seeks to revise the order and judgment of the District Court.

• DEYNANTHAKATH v. PATINHARAYIL AVULLA.

This is an unfranchised nam and a point directly in issue is whether the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have any claim to succeed to the office, and whether the plaintiff as lessee can recover the emoluments of the office. Section 21 Act III of 1895 would seem, therefore, to apply. But it has been settled that section 21 must be read with section 13. In spite of the generality of the language of section 21, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is taken away only in those cases in which it is conferred on the Revenue Court by section 13. Maroulis Seetharam Naidu v. Doddi Ram Naidu (1). Under section 13 any person may sue before the Collector for a village office or for its emoluments on the ground that he is entitled to hold such office and enjoy such emoluments. The section is clearly confined to the persons claiming in their own rights as holders. On behalf of the respondents, it is urged that if this be so, a holder has only to lease the emoluments and leave it to the lessee to sue on his title in order to carry the suit away from the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. The short answer is, that he can do this if he so pleases. The question of jurisdiction is merely mechanical and involves no equities. If a holder wants to sue, the Legislature has provided the Revenue Court as his forum, if any other person is suing it has provided the ordinary Civil Courts.

The defence has exhibited a certified copy of judgment in an unreported case of this Court. I deprecate the practice. Courts should depend upon reported cases for guidance. In this Exhibit it has been ruled that although the plaintiff is not a holder of the office and is a mere alienee from the office holder the suit is still governed by section 21, Act III of 1895 on the authority of Palamalai Padayachi v. Shanmuga Ausari (2) and Veerabadrachari v. Suppiah Achari (3). In Palamalai Padayachi v. Shanmuga Ausari

(2) the plaintiff sued on the ground that he was the village carpenter and as such entitled to the lands attached to that office. The question for determination was whether the suit was barred by section 3, Regulation VI of 1831 and a Full Bench found it to be so barred. In Veerabadrachari Achari v. Subbah Achari (3) the plaintiff sued as holders for the office of carpenter, and it was found that the office in this case was not one covered by the special acts. No reported case has been brought to my notice in which it has been ruled that a mere alienee is, barred under section 21, Act III of 1895 and as at present advised I do not see how it could be so ruled.

I must, therefore, allow this petition, and reverse the judgment and order of the lower Appellate Court. The District Munsif of Tiruvellore has jurisdiction and must proceed with the suit.

Petitioner will have costs throughout.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 77 of 1918, (Appeal Suit No. 594 of 1916, on the file of the District Court, North Malabar), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Badagara, in Original Suit No. 685 of 1911.

Mr. K. Govinda Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff is the owner of one share in the equity of redemption of the plaintiff properties which have been mortgaged to the second defendant. The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for redemption of her share alone, but, as the plaintiff was not willing to take such a decree, her suit has been dismissed, and now in appeal she contends that she is entitled to redeem the whole of the property on payment of the whole of the mortgage amount. This is in accordance with the decision in Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parameswaram Nambudri (1) and also the decision in Mora Joshi v. Ramchandra Dinkar Joshi (2) and Narayan v. Ganpat (3) but the former decision was expressly dissented from in a later one reported as Rathna Mudali v. Perumal Reddy (4). Our attention has however, been called to a very recent ruling of the Privy Council reported as Mirza Yadelli Beg v. Tukaram (5) in which it is held that, subject to the safeguarding of the equal title to redeem of any other person who had a right of redemption, the owner of a partial equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the entire mortgage. It follows that if the plaintiff is to be allowed to redeem the entire mortgage, we must in accordance with the above ruling provide for safeguarding the interests of her co-owners. It would be quite possible for the plaintiff to obtain a decree for redemption and then in collusion with the mortgagee allow that decree to become barred by non-payment of the mortgage amount and, consequently, deprive her co-owners of their right to redeem. We think that in this case it will be advisable to send the case down to the lower Appellate Court in order to ascertain the amount due upon the mortgage, including the value of improvements, and to pass an order directing the plaintiff to deposit that amount in Court within three months of its ascertainment, and directing on such deposit being made a decree for redemption to be passed. If the plaintiff fails to deposit the amount her suit will have to be dismissed. We, therefore, send back the suit to the lower Appellate Court for disposal in the light of the above remarks.

Ordinarily a mortgagee is entitled to his costs; but, as he has failed in this Court the plaintiff would be entitled to her costs so far as this second appeal is concerned; but considering the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge's decision was in accordance with the latest ruling of this Court and was arrived at before the decision of the Privy Council was reported as Mirza Yadelli Beg v. Tukaram (5) we think that each party should bear his own costs in this second appeal.

RESPONDENTS*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Impugning creditor, whether should be creditor at date of alienation—Consideration—Settlement on account of natural love and affection*

It is not necessary under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act that the creditor impugning the alienation should have been a creditor at the time of the alienation. If a person makes a transfer of his property in view of his becoming a debtor or of getting a decree passed against him in the future, and if the object of the transfer is shown to have been to defeat the claims of his creditors, section 53 will cover the case.

From the mere fact that a settlement deed was executed on account of natural love and affection, it does not follow that the intention was not to defeat creditors. The question has to be decided on evidence as to circumstances under which the transfer was made.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, North Arcot, in C. M. P. No. 104 of 1922 (E. P. No. 19 of 1920—O S. No. 19 of 1919, on the file of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittoor—O S. No. 24 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishna Iyer for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under sections 47 and 96 of the Civil Procedure Code in an execution matter. The appellant had obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 4,000 and odd against the second respondent his father and in execution of that decree had attached certain items of properties. Now these items had been transferred by the father to his second wife, after the suit had been brought but before attachment, by a deed of settlement. The document is not on the record but we understand that there is such a deed of settlement. The plaintiff thereupon impugned the document as one fraudulently executed with a view to defeat and delay the claims of creditors, particularly of himself. The learned Judge disposed of the matter without taking any evidence as to the circumstances under which the settlement was executed to see whether it was not a case of fraudulent conveyance. He starts by observing that the plaintiff cannot be regarded as one of his father's creditors at the time when the settlement was executed as he had not obtained his decree yet, the suit being only one on account. It is not, however, necessary under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act that the creditor impugning the alienation should have been a creditor at the time of the alienation. If a person makes a transfer of his property in view of his becoming a debtor or of getting a decree passed against him in the future, and if the object of the transfer is shown to have been to defeat the claims of his creditors, section 53 will cover the case. The District Judge also says that the settlement deed was not executed gratuitously but on account of natural love and affection. That may be so but it does not necessarily follow that the intention was not to defeat the creditors; a man may merely make a transfer to his wife or a near relation of his to defeat creditors. The question has to be decided on evidence as to the circumstances under which the transfer was made. In this case the father is said to have transferred all his properties to his second wife, after the son had brought his suit for an account and for the delivery of his share of the family properties. The transfer seems prima facie to be fraudulent but the question must be decided by the Court after taking evidence. We set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case to the lower Court for disposal in the light of the observations above made. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Acceptance of rent—Estoppel.

The mere mutation of the name of a person in place of that of a deceased under-proprietor in respect of certain land, followed by acceptance of rent from him by the proprietor, without any inquiry as to his title, does not operate as an estoppel against the proprietor [p. 948; col. 1].

The law of estoppel is compendiously set forth in section 115, Evidence Act, under which it is necessary that the person sought to be estopped should have intentionally caused or permitted the other party to believe a certain thing to be true and to act upon that belief [p. 947; col. 2].

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 10th March, 1919, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed the decree, dated the 25th April, 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad.

The appellants are the plaintiffs in a suit for possession of certain villages. They also claimed mesne profits, a claim which was rightly disallowed and of which no more need be said. What remains is the suit for possession itself. Both the Courts before whom the suit came in India held that the plaintiffs' title to the villages was proved. Their Lordships are in entire agreement with that conclusion.

The Trial Judge decreed the suit for possession. The Appellate Court dismissed it on the ground that the appellants were estopped from denying all claim of the first respondent to hold the villages for life as an under-proprietor without power of alienation. The only question in the appeal is whether the appellants' suit fails by reason of this alleged estoppel. In the opinion of the Board it does not so fail, and the appellants are not estopped.

The villages are in the Fyzabad District and were the absolute property of one Dhup Narain Singh. He was the owner of the taluk which embraced them. On his death his wife, Rajau Kuar, claimed to be in possession of these villages as pukhtadar. Had she been so she would have been an under-proprietor with a right both heritable and transferable. In May, 1878, this question having been raised in Court, was settled by a compromise, and it is to the terms of that compromise that both parties refer. These terms are as follows—

"In the case noted above I, the plaintiff, have claimed an under-proprietary right in 10 biswas share in village Mendhi Salimpur. We, the parties, have agreed to these terms, that in village Mendhi Salimpur I, the plaintiff, shall remain in possession of the defendant's share as under-proprietor during my life-time without the power of transfer and sale; that after my (the plaintiff's) death the wife of Babu Kalka Bakhsh Singh, my son, shall also enter into possession without the power of alienation and sale and any other person shall have nothing to do with it; that I shall continue to pay the Government land revenue and 15 per cent. the profits of the Talukdar defendant."

Rajau Kuar had possession of the villages under the agreement of May, 1878, till her death in 1901, when her rights of course came to an end. Musammat Sander Kuar, the wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh, under the terms of the agreement of compromise hereafter possessed the villages, but her rights ceased with her death in 1905.

As the Judicial Commissioner properly observes in his judgment "Kalka Bakhsh Singh is not shown to have had any other wife then alive. The limited rights created by the compromise, therefore, came to an end on the expiry of the above life estates; and the property, which was the subject of these rights, subsequently reverted to the heir and successor in interest of the grantee then in existence. As Kalka Bakhsh Singh, the son and successor of the grantor, had sold his entire right, title and interest in the property in dispute to the Court of Wards, the vested interest he held in the reversion passed by the sale to the Court of Wards, who became entitled to that reversion on her death.

MITRA SHN SINGH v. JANKI KUAR.

In 1906 Kalka Bakhsh Singh married a second wife and there is no doubt of the fact that she remained in possession for a period of about eight years. Further, there is no doubt that she obtained a mutation of names, and that she paid rent with 15 per cent for collection to the Talukdar, that is to say, to the Court of Wards. It is upon these facts that the claim of estoppel arises.

The assertion made when mutation of names was obtained was of course erroneous and must have been so to her knowledge. Musammât Janki Kuar was entitled neither to be entered in the under-proprietary registry as a pukhtadar, nor had she under the compromise agreement, which was the sole basis of title which could be founded upon, any rights whatsoever to possession of the villages. Very possibly what happened was simply that the Collector and the officials charged with the mutation record assumed that she, another wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh, was possessing the same villages on the same title as her predecessor. Two officials are examined, one a translator and petition writer in the Civil Court who identifies the signatures of the zilladars the other the zilladar and collector of rates, and they gave evidence that the Court of Wards made no enquiries about the status of the persons to whom the receipts were issued or whether the defendant was in truth the pukhtadar.

The Court of Wards, however, has discovered the mistake which has been made and the fact that Musammât Janki Kuar had no title whatsoever to the pukhta- dari rights and the present suit has been brought.

With all respect to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner it is difficult to understand how the doctrine of estoppel applies to a case of this character. There is no peculiarity in the law of India as distinguished from that of England which would justify such an application. The law of India is compendiously set forth in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, Act I of 1872. It will save a long statement by simply stating that section, which is as follows.

"When one person has by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

There seems no place upon the facts for the suggestion that the Court of Wards has intentionally caused or permitted Janki Kuar to believe it to be true and to act upon the belief that she was a talukdar or that she had any right of possession under the compromise agreement already alluded to. That point might be quite sufficient to dispose of the case.

But the Court of the Judicial Commissioner goes so far as to declare that what has happened is tantamount to a waiver for the time being of the right of reversion and that the Court of Wards has thus been committed to recognition of the right of Musammât Janki Kuar to succeed to the pukhtadari rights under the compromise as if she had been the wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh when Musammât Sûnder Kuar died. Their Lordships fail to understand how the doctrine of estoppel could ever be founded upon for the purposes of the recognition of any such claim or the rearing up of any such right. The whole of this doctrine appears to be founded simply upon the transaction of taking rent each year, but the taking of a rent each year may, and as the Courts have properly held, did, bar by estoppel the Court of Wards from any claim for mesne profits during the particular year or years for which such rent was received. It estopped the Court of Wards from maintaining that the lady possessed the property with a liability to account or possess on any other or further terms than on payment of the rent made and taken.

But there estoppel stops and it can never be reared up into the creation of a pukhtadari right of a proprietary, heritable, and transferable character, nor can it ever create a right of possession of the property for life under the same terms as some other person had previously possessed it upon. Such foundations of title are unknown and they can never be created in such a manner.

At their Lordships' Bar Mr. Dube ingeniously argued that there were, however, other circumstances which might be founded upon for the purpose of producing such rights either of permanent ownership or possession for life. Even were such a thing legally possible, it need only be remarked that in cases of estoppel the onus of establishing the facts and circumstances from which estoppel arises rests upon the person pleading it. No facts and circumstances whatsoever, apart from the occupation, appear to the Board to have been established in this case. Their Lordships must decline to accept statements made in another suit (one which was dismissed) on the subject of the payment of mortgages resting upon properties. It is nowhere established that this lady ever disbursed any payments of the kind, and it has to be remarked, in conclusion that she herself, who knew all the facts and the circumstances of the situation, did not give evidence in the case. On examination accordingly the case for estoppel seems to be ill-founded in law, and if it were well-founded in law seems to be quite unsubstantiated in fact.

The decision in the case of President and Governors of Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (1) which was referred to in discussion, afforded no help to the respondents because, as observed by Lord Selborne, a long term was "attempted to be granted by a charitable corporation at a peppercorn rent. If any rent had been reserved and received, however small, the legal relation of a tenancy from year to year would have been created, and the Statute of Limitations could not have run."

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed and the decree of the Trial Judge be restored with cost since that date in the Courts below, and with the costs of this appeal.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision is whether the second proviso to O. XXI, r. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a mortgage decree for sale. It applies in terms only to a decree "for the payment of money". The phrase in the old section 232 was "a decree for money." The alteration indicates that emphasis is to be laid on the word "payment" and that unless the decree directs payment of money, the Rule will not apply. This is the view taken in the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Laldhar Singh v. Manager Bhabatpura Estate (1). The Calcutta High Court has consistently held the view that this proviso will not apply to mortgage decrees for sale [vide the above ruling and also Lalla Bhagun Pershad v. Holloway (2) and Jagabandhu Pal v. Haladhar Pal (3)].

Appellant relies on three cases of this Court. Two of these, Vaidhianathasamy Iyer v. Somasundram Pillai (4) and Bayyana Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (5) are not of much assistance as they do not deal with the language of O. XXI, r. 16 or the corresponding section under the old Civil Procedure Code. In Sadagopa Aiyengar v. Sellammal (6) language somewhat favourable to appellant's contention has been used, but even in that case it is clear that the decree was a "decree for the payment of money," although in the case of the first defendant, the decree directed the money to be paid out of his family property. None of these cases affects the general principle laid down in the Calcutta cases, and inherent, in our opinion in the Rule itself, that the proviso does not apply to decrees which are in essence decrees, not for the payment of money but for the sale of property. We are of opinion that the order appealed against is correct and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

An amaldari lease which contains all the essential terms of a lease requires registration and is not admissible in evidence without registration. he was already a tenant under the landlords of the land of dag No. 11 and that the landlords during the Record of Rights included a portion of his jote within dag No. 1 of the Record of Rights which was recorded as khas patit. The plaintiff further alleged that although he had an existing tenancy right to a portion of the lands now in dispute he was obliged in order to avoid a dispute with the landlords to take a fresh settlement from the landlords and that an amaldari was granted by the landlords in 1322 B. S.

The defence of defendant No. 1 was that all these lands formed part of the zemindar's khas patit recorded in dag No. 1 and that he took settlement from the landlords in 1324 and that, therefore, the lands appertained to the jote settled with him by the landlords.

It appears that there was a local investigation by which the Commissioner in his map indicated the situation of the different dags and their extent. The report of the Commissioner, however, was found by the lower Appellate Court as not helpful in the matter and that Court decided the case really without any reference to the Commissioner's report.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not a tenant with reference to the lands now in dispute and that the amaldari produced by the plaintiff was forgery and in the view it dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and given a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for.

I must confess that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is, to say the least of it, very unsatisfactory. As the matter stands a local investigation is necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the dispute between the parties, at any rate, for ascertaining how much of the land now in dispute was really a part of the jote claimed by the plaintiff with reference to dag No. 11 in respect of which he was already a tenant under the landlords. The lower Appellate Court really rested his judgment on the finding, so far as I understand, as on the basis of the amaldari produced by the plaintiff. As I have already stated the First Court found this document to be not genuine. The lower Appellate Court merely contended itself by saying, "There is no reason why these should be suspected." With reference to the question as to whether the amaldari was really a genuine document or not and also as to whether it was anti-dated with a view to establish the plaintiff's claim which did not exist before the learned Subordinate Judge refused to go into the question on the ground that no question of limitation did arise in the present case. The lower Appellate Court recorded the following finding: "There is absolutely no reason why they would be even suspected so. As the plaintiffs have proved their alleged settlements they are entitled to get declaration of their respective titles in terms of the amaldaris. Although the learned Subordinate Judge found at the beginning of his judgment that the Commissioner's report was not satisfactory he based his decree upon the demarcation made by the Commissioner."

As I have already stated the defendants have appealed and the learned Vakil who appears for them has contended that as the lower Appellate Court based his judgment with reference to the plaintiff's title solely on the amaldari the plaintiff's case is not maintainable as the amaldari is not admissible in evidence without registration. The learned Vakil further contends that the question of possession was material for the determination of the question as to whether the amaldari was really a genuine document or not and that the lower Appellate Court has committed an error in refusing to try that question. In support of the contention that the document was not admissible in evidence the learned Vakil for the appellants has relied upon the Full Bench case of Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amrad Ali (1) and also upon the case of Blair v. Hukun. (2). The learned Vakil for the respondents has contended that the question as to whether the amaldari was admissible in evidence or not, was not raised in the Court of first instance and was not raised before the lower Appellate Court, therefore, it can not be raised here. With reference to that objection, the learned Vakil for the appellants relied upon the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Krishen Das v. Babu Madho Das (3). It appears to me that the question whether the amaldari is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration is a question which can be raised even if it were not raised in the Court of Appeal below. It has been pointed out that as a matter of fact the document was objected to in the First Court and it was not necessary for the First Court to discuss the admissibility of the document for the simple reason that that Court found the document to be not genuine. It is quite clear that the question was not discussed by the lower Appellate Court. But the question when raised here, I think, must be decided, because the whole of the plaintiff's case depends as tried by the lower Appellate Court upon the amaldari produced by him. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Krishen Das v. Babu Madho Das (3) and by a number of decisions of this Court when a question is raised whether a document is admissible or not on the ground of want of registration or on the ground that the document is irrelevant it can be raised at any stage of the case. It is such objections as can only be remedied, if taken, at the earliest stage, that are not allowed to be raised at a later stage. The question, therefore, arises whether this amaldari is admissible in evidence or not without registration. Mere name of a document decides nothing. It is really what the document purports to do that is of importance and the question must be determined on that basis. The learned Vakil for the respondents relies upon the cases of Lukhan Chandra Mondal v. Takim Dhal (4), and Dwarkanath v. Lodu Sikdar (5) in support of the contention that this amaldari is a document which falls within the class of documents discussed in the two cases cited by him. The real test is whether this document really purports to be a mere license to take possession, or in other words, whether it is a document which purports to be a lease or an agreement to lease or not. If the document really does not amount to a lease then under the authorities relied upon by the learned Vakil for the respondents it does not require registration. I had the document read to me and I have myself carefully considered its terms. It appears to me that it was really a lease in all its essentials. It contains recital of an application for a lease by the plaintiff. It contains the boundaries of the land to be demised. It further recites that the landlord grants the plaintiff the right to enjoy the land as a tenant on payment of the usual rent payable for such lands. It is difficult to see if it is not a lease what is wanting there to make it a lease. I, therefore, hold that this is a document which requires registration and is not admissible in evidence without registration.

But it is necessary that the lower Appellate Court should try another question which arises if the amaldari is excluded. It is quite clear from the plaint that the plaintiff's case was that a part if not the whole of the land now in dispute formed part of his old jote and that he was compelled by the landlords to take a fresh settlement as he was unwilling to quarrel with his landlord. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court lends some support to this view when the lower Appellate Court says: "It is alleged that the landlords said that the northern portions of the plots did not appertain to the plaintiff's jamas and forced them to take settlements from them of such portions and they accordingly took settlements of such portions together with portion of settlement dag No. 1 adjoining such portions to the north." Therefore, it has been contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that there was an existing jote as to which there was no dispute and if the land now in dispute was a part of that jote belonging to the plaintiff or a settlement was already made with the plaintiff before any settlement with the defendants on receipt of nazar and on receipt of rent from the plaintiff the plaintiff will be entitled to rely upon these two questions in support of his claim although the amaldari might be excluded from the evidence in this case. I think this contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent is of considerable force. I think the case cannot be finally determined without a determination of these questions.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court and that Court should determine the questions whether the land in suit or any part of it formed part of the existing jote of the plaintiff or whether there was any completed tenancy of the plaintiff created by the receipt of rent by the landlords for the disputed area before the amaldari was granted.

I may point out that if the lower Appellate Court, when the case goes back to that Court, finds that the Commissioner's report is not satisfactory that Court would have the right to direct a fresh enquiry for the proper determination of the situation of the different dags and the claim of the plaintiff with reference to his existing tenancy in any portion of the lands in suit.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Guardian and minor—Debt due from Hindu father to minor—Pro-note by sons—Suit by guardian on debt—Decree against father—Dismissal against sons—Omission to file pro-note, whether gross negligence—Later suit by minor to re-open first suit, whether maintainable

Where a suit is brought by the guardian of a minor against a Hindu father and his sons based upon their ordinary liability under the Hindu Law, in respect of a debt borrowed by the father for an alleged necessity, purposely withholding a pro-note executed by the sons in favour of the minor plaintiff undertaking to share their liability, with a view to get a decree against all the members of the joint Hindu family, and the suit is decreed only against the father, the minor cannot on attaining majority re-open the case against the sons on the basis of pro-note on the ground that the guardian in the previous suit had been guilty of gross negligence in keeping back the pro-note [p 553, col 1]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Masulipatam, in Appeal No. 1 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tanuku, in O. S. No. 31 of 1918 (O. S. No. 151 of 1914 on the file of the Principal District Munsif's Court, Tanuku.)

Mr. G. Lakshmanan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in this second appeal is that the guardian of the plaintiff was guilty of gross negligence and that he is, therefore, entitled to re-open the case decided against him. The plaintiff's guardian sued the father and his four sons for a debt due according to her allegation by the whole family. The debt was ostensibly borrowed for the expenses of the marriage of the 4th defendant, one of the sons of the first defendant in the previous suit, she got a decree against the father, the first defendant, and the suit was dismissed against the sons. The plaintiff now wants to re-open the case and get a decree against the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 on the ground that they executed Exhibit A under which they undertook to share the liability. Exhibit A was not produced in the previous suit. Mr. Lakshmanan strongly relies upon this fact and contends that the omission to produce Exhibit A in the previous suit, amounts to gross negligence. But it must be remembered that the previous suit was based upon the ordinary Hindu Law liability under which the father and sons are liable for a debt borrowed for a purpose such as the expenses of marriage of one of the sons. This omission to produce Exhibit A in his previous suit cannot be considered to be gross negligence. The learned Subordinate Judge has considered the matter and he is of opinion that the document was kept back purposely in order to get a decree against all the defendants, i. e., the father and sons. In the face of that finding, it is impossible to contend that the plaintiff's guardian was guilty of gross negligence. Mr. Lakshmanna very strongly relies upon the case reported in Gottepati Subbanna v. Gottepati Narasamma (1). There the father set up a right by adoption, while he could very well have set up a title under a Will. The father evidently in order to get the whole property set up the case of adoption, which was false to his knowledge and the finding in that case was that the father was aware of the existence of the Will under which the son would be entitled to half the property. The learned Judges held that the father was guilty of gross negligence inasmuch as he set up a false case to his knowledge and did not set up a case which was true to his knowledge. In Chunduru Ponnayyah v. Rajam Viranna (2) it was held that a decree could be set aside for the fraud or collusion of the guardian ad litem in not defending the suit on behalf of the minor. The facts are different here. The guardian claimed a decree against five persons whereas she could have been satisfied with only a decree against defendants Nos. 3 and 4. It cannot be said in the circumstances that she was guilty of gross negligence which would entitle the plaintiff to have the case re-opened.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 105, 106—Application by landlord under s. 105 and by tenant under s. 106—Disposal of application under s. 105 stayed by consent of parties—Decision given in application under s. 106 before final decision in application under s. 106—Decisions under two sections conflicting—Decision under s. 106, whether binding

A landlord applied for the settlement of fair rent under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. Then the tenant made an application under section 106 alleging that he had held his tenancy at a uniform rate of rent for so long that he was entitled to the presumption under section 50 of the Act. The hearing of the application under section 105 was stayed until the disposal of the application under section 106 on the ground, that the case under section 106 would dispose of the question whether the rent was fixed or not and this argument was not challenged, on behalf of the landlord. The application under section 106 was dismissed for default and revived and decided eventually in favour of the tenant but between the date of its dismissal for default and the order for restoration the application under section 105 was taken up and a rent higher than that entered in the Record of Rights was fixed as fair rent.

Held, (Mukerjee, J., dissenting)—that as by mutual consent of the landlord and tenant the question whether the rent could be enhanced or not was to be settled in application under section 106, the matter should be looked at from the position which the parties would have occupied had the application under section 106 been not dismissed for default and the application under section 105 not taken up by the Revenue Officer and the parties should be bound by the decision in application under section 106 and not by their application under section 105 [p. 954, cols 1 & 2].

JUDGMENT.

Wainmsley, J.—These two appeals arise from two rent suits which were decided by one judgment. A third appeal from the same judgment has abated. The landlord is the appellant.

The facts are as follows. There was a Record of Rights prepared and finally published. In it the respondents were shown as the owners of separate jotes, each jote bearing a separate jama. The landlord made an application under section 105 of the Tenancy Act for the settlement of fair rents. Then one Osman Ali put in an application under section 106 alleging that his jote and the jotes of the respondents formed part of a parent jote, which had been held at a uniform rate of rent for so long that the holders were entitled to the presumption arising under section 50 of the Act. The respondents did not join in that application or make similar applications, but they were made pro forma defendants. The hearing of the applications under section 105 was stayed until the disposal of the application under section 106, and the reason alleged by the respondents for seeking a stay was that the case under section 106 would dispose of the question whether the rents were fixed or not and this argument, I understand, was not challenged on behalf of the landlord. The application under section 106 was dismissed for default, but later it was revived, and it was decided eventually in favour of Osman Ali. Unfortunately between the date of its dismissal for default and the order for restoration, the applications under section 105 were taken up, and fair rents were fixed, such rents being higher than the rents entered in the Record of Rights. It is for these fair rents that the present suits have been brought. The Court of Appeal below has held that the plaintiff cannot recover more than the old rents. The object of the landlord's appeals is to obtain decrees for the fair rents fixed in the proceedings under section 105 of the Act.

It is argued for the plaintiff that these particular respondents made no applications under section 106; that they might have appealed against the orders settling fair rents or applied for revision, and that the Revenue Officer's decision has under section 107 the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties. These criticisms are correct. But I think we are entitled to go below the surface to actual position taken up by the parties. To my mind it is clear that by mutual consent the question whether the rents could be enhanced or not was to be settled in Osman Ali's application; and had the Revenue Officer been apprised of the fact that steps had been taken to have that application restored, he would not have proceeded with the applications under section 105. The fact that he was not informed is not due to any fraud on the part of the landlord or any negligence on the part of the tenants, but to the confusion which inevitably results from the immense volume of work with which a Revenue Officer has to deal. Consequently, the matter should be looked at from the position which the parties would have occupied if the true facts had been made known to the Revenue Officer.

As the question of enforceability has been decided in the tenant's favour, I think the reasonable view of the situation is that taken by the learned Judge in the lower Court. This view was taken by another Bench of which I was a member.

I think, therefore, that the appeals should be dismissed, but in the peculiar circumstances I would leave each party to bear its own costs.

My learned brother unfortunately takes a different view and he would allow the appeals. In these cases my opinion must prevail, whether we proceed under the Letters Patent or under the Code.

PRASANNA DEB V. ACHHIRUDDIN MAHAMMAD.

The result, therefore, is that the appeals are dismissed, each party bearing his own costs.

Mukerji, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment just now delivered by my learned brother. I regret very much that I have not been able to agree in the orders which he has passed in these two appeals.

My difficulty arises from the clear provision of section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which attaches finality to decisions under section 105 of that Act. I am unable to construe the consent of the plaintiff to the adjournments of these cases under section 105 as an admission on his part, even by implication, that the decision in the case under section 106 would govern those cases.

In one of these cases, viz., Case No. 1702 of 1913 which relates to S. A. No. 2563 of 1921 there was a clear order of the Revenue Officer that the decision in the case under section 106 would not apply to it. The reason for that order was that the case under section 106 was with reference to a different khatian. It should be observed that that case related to Khatian No. 351 while the three applications under section 105 (two of which relate to the present appeals; and the third one to S. A. No. 2561 of 1921 which has already been dismissed on the ground that it had abated) related to Khatians Nos. 328, 334 and 345. This reason, therefore, applies to the other cases as well. It may be, as found by the learned Subordinate Judge, that the jotes in the present suits are parts of the same Chameru Ohandua jote, to which the Jote of Osman Ali belongs. It is true that the respondents were pro forma defendants in the case under section 106, but they were impleaded only because portions of the original jote were in their occupation. The real point decided in that case, however, was the fixity of rent and the character of Osman Ali's jote; and there was no decision with regard to the jotes of the respondents. It does not appear that either in the case under section 106 or in the cases under section 105, the respondents ever pressed their objection that the rents of the jotes were not liable to enhancement or took any steps to get them declared mu-karari. I do not, therefore, see how the decision in the case under section 106 can be of any avail to the respondents so long as the decisions under section 105 stand and so long as they are not found to have been vitiated by fraud. When the decisions have not been set aside by one of other of the modes recognised by law, effect must, in my opinion, be given to them.

Substantial justice perhaps will be done by the orders which my learned brother has passed in these appeals. I am, however, unable to dissuade them in view of the law as it stands. In my judgment these appeals should be allowed, the decrees of the learned Subordinate Judge reversed and those of the learned Munsif restored with costs. In view of the peculiar circumstances of these cases I would make no order as to costs either in this Court or in the Court of Appeal below.

There remains the question as to what should be the result of this difference of opinion. The question is not free from difficulty. On the one hand there is this practice, uniform and unvaried, followed by all the High Courts in India so far as appeals under the Civil Procedure Code are concerned ever since the provision corresponding to section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure was embodied in the law of Civil Procedure of acting under the said provision; and on the other hand there is the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Bhardas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (1) that clause 36 of the Letters Patent should apply, a decision the wording of which does not suggest that the clause should apply only to Original Side Appeals and appeals under the Letters Patent and not to appeals under the Code of Civil Procedure. It would serve no useful purpose to enter upon a discussion of the authorities bearing upon the question. They have been exhaustively and elaborately discussed and all conceivable arguments, pro and con, have been considered in the judgment of Subhawardy, J., in Appeals from Orders Nos. 19 and 20 of 1923. Speaking for myself I doubt very much that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee intended their decision to be of such far reaching consequences as to upset the settled practice which has obtained in this country close upon half a century. The fact that only three cases have been referred to in their Lordships' decision as showing that the application of clause 36 of the Letters Patent was not a novel idea and that all the three cases are clearly cases where the provisions as now contained in section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code could not possibly apply confirms me in my doubt. It is well-known, however, that there is a diversity of judicial opinion with regard to this matter. My learned brother, I find, has taken a contrary view in the appeals referred to above.

It is unnecessary, however, to pursue the matter further on the present occasion, because it would make no practical difference in result so far as these appeals are concerned, whether the one or the other view is adopted.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Secretary of State and the three persons who purchased the lands which were the subject-matter of Second Appeal No. 1025 of 1921, in which judgment has just now been delivered, are the plaintiffs. They sue to recover possession of the lands from the defendant on the ground that the defendant's lease had been terminated by a proper notice to quit and they are entitled to possession. The decree was asked to be given in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4. The lower Courts have granted the decree asked for and the defendant appeals.

It is contended on his behalf that his tenancy has not been properly terminated by a proper notice to quit and that, therefore, he was not bound to surrender possession. The argument is that the notices as issued by the Government, Exhibits O and P, were not issued by the party entitled to issue notices, as by the time they were issued, the Government had parted with all its rights to plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 and they were the proper parties to issue notices, it is argued that notices should consequently be held to be bad. Before considering this matter, it must be observed that in the plaint an allegation was made that notices—(Exhibits O and P) dated 14th December 1916 and 21st February 1917 were given by the Government to the defendant and that, as the time fixed under them had expired, the defendant's tenancy had been properly terminated before suit. The defendant raised no objection to this averment in his written statement and no issue was framed as to the sufficiency or the validity of the notices. In the appeal memo, in the lower Appellate Court, the point was, however, taken and the affidavit filed by the learned Vakil for the appellant in that Court says that the point was argued before the Subordinate Judge, but no notice was taken by the Subordinate Judge of this contention possibly because the point had not been raised in the Court of first instance.

The first question then which arises for decision is whether it is open to the defendant now in second appeal to insist upon the point being raised and considered. He has relied upon two cases reported in Abdullah Rawutan v. Subbarayyar (1) and Subba v. Nagappa (2) in which questions of notice were allowed to be taken in second appeal when they were not taken in the lower Courts but these decisions were subsequently considered by this Court in several cases which have been brought to my notice and the view taken in the later cases is that though it is open to the Court, to allow such a point to be taken in second appeal, it is not bound to do so; and it seems to me that ordinarily it should not allow it to be taken, because if a point like that is allowed in second appeal, when it was not taken in the First Court, the result will be that the plaintiff will be prejudiced as he would lose the advantage of withdrawing his suit, when he finds that his notice was not a proper notice, and of bringing a fresh suit at once after giving a proper notice. The authorities cited for the respondents are L. P. A. 102 of 1913, Armugam Pillai, In re (3), Muthu Reddi v. Muthu Venkatapathi Reddi (4), Venkapappier v. Ramaswami Aiyar (5) and Kunhu Kuttan Nair v. Govindan Nambuduri (6). In all these cases, it was held that the point should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal. No doubt, as Mr. Menon points out, in the cases of Venkapappier v. Ramaswami Aiyar (5) and Kunhu Kuttan Nair v. Govindan Nambuduri (6) some point was made of the fact that the question was not raised even in the lower Appellate Court, but I do not think there is any valid distinction between a case where the point is taken in the lower Appellate Court, but not in the Court of first instance and a case where the point is taken in neither of the lower Courts. If the point is to be treated as a necessary part of the allegation by the plaintiff (the landlord) which he should prove to obtain a decree in ejectment, it would not matter whether it was not taken in the First Court or in both the lower Courts, but that view has not been adopted and I consider that the proper view is that, when the point is not taken in the lower Courts, it should not be allowed to be taken in second appeal. In this case, so far as the property for which patta has been given to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 4 is concerned, proper notice was given to the defendant by the Government before the pattas were issued to those plaintiffs. It is clear, therefore, that the principle relied upon by Mr. Menon that, when a landlord parts with the right of possession of his property to a third party by either mortgaging or by selling away the property, he has no longer any right to give notice to quit as the proper person to give the notice is the transferee as held in Wordsley Brewery Co. v. Halford (7), will not apply for the English cases recognise that the person who is the landlord and entitled to possession on the date of the notice to quit is the proper person to give the notice and that an assignee within the currency of that notice can take advantage of the notice sent by his assignor and rely upon it when he brings a suit for recovering possession. As regards the third plaintiff it may be that there is some difficulty as the notice regarding his land seems to have been issued after the patta was granted to him. It is, however, very doubtful whether the principle laid down in Wordsley Brewery Co. v. Halford (7) will apply to this case. That was a case where the owner of a certain property at first gave an oral lease to the defendant and subsequently during the continuance of the tenancy granted to the plaintiffs as period lease of 14 years. After granting this lease a notice to quit in writing addressed to the first tenant signed by the husband of the owner of the premises as her agent to deliver possession of the property was served upon the tenant. The question then was whether that was a proper notice to quit and their Lordships no doubt held that it was not a proper notice, but their reasoning was as follows. They held that, as soon as the second lease was granted, it took effect at once, that the grant of the lease "passed the reversion and not merely the attornment", and that, therefore, the grantor had no longer any right of possession and could not exercise the right of giving notice to quit to terminate the tenancy. The argument turned upon the question whether the granting of the period lease amounted to the passing of the reversion or not, and their Lordships say after discussing about some authorities "it is said that some authorities are inconsistent with that view, that is, the view that it did pass and to some extent they may be, but even if that is so, we have to choose between them all. We must hold that the reversion passed." In the present case the Government granted pattas to the plaintiffs. If there was an arrangement, as suggested by the Government Pleader, between the Government and the plaintiffs that the Government's right to recover possession was to continue and that they should get possession from the tenant and hand it over to the pattadars, the right to possession for the limited purpose will still remain in the Government, though pattas may have been granted. If this is so, I do not see why the Government is not the proper authority to issue the notice to quit.

The point as to notice has not been tried, it was not taken in the First Court and to allow it to be taken now will involve a fresh trial on facts. I do not think I am bound to allow such a point to be taken in second appeal.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs one set.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of certain land. Both the first and the lower Appellate Courts have given a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The facts necessary for the determination of this appeal are shortly these. The plaintiffs claim to be occupancy rayats with reference to the land in suit. The defendants who are called for the sake of brevity Koles were under rayats under the plaintiffs. The under rayats sold their interest to defendants Nos. 1 and 3. The defence of the defendants was so far as it appears from the judgments of the Courts below, and the issues which have been read to us, that the Koles were not under rayats and also that the Koles had a transferable right in the land and that they had not abandoned their rights. It appears that although the defendants had entered appearance and issues were raised, ultimately at the trial, they did not appear. On the ground that certain papers which had been sent for at their instance, were not before the Court at the time of the trial. The result was that the Munsif tried the suit ex parte and accepting the plaintiffs' evidence which stood uncontradicted, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendants appealed to the lower Appellate Court and the learned District Judge who tried that appeal has dealt with the question whether or not the ex parte trial of the suit was justified and come to the conclusion that under the circumstances the Munsif was right in refusing the adjournment at the instance of the defendants. Then the learned District Judge dealt with the question which was raised before him on appeal as to the merits of the case and found that the non-transferable under rayats of the Koles was transferred to the defendants evidently meaning thereby to defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and the learned Judge further found that the Koles were not in possession of the land as under rayats as apparently it was contended on behalf of the defendants, the appellants before him that the Koles were still in possession. The learned Judge further found that the Koles were still in possession of a portion of the land because their mother had taken a sub-lease from the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 of a portion of the land which the Koles had transferred to defendants Nos. 1 and 3. On these findings the learned District Judge held that the Koles had abandoned the holding and confirmed the decree of the Munsif.

In this second appeal against that decree of the learned District Judge the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellants contended that the judgments of the Courts below were not in accordance with law inasmuch as the judgments did not find the facts necessary for passing the decree which has been made. The second contention of the learned Vakil was that upon the facts found by the Courts below there was no abandonment of this land by the Koles. As regards the first contention we are of opinion that there are findings in the judgments of the Courts below necessary for the determination of the question raised before them. The judgment of the learned Munsif no doubt is not very full and this is accounted for by the fact that the suit was tried ex parte as the defendants did not appear at the trial but when the matter came before the District Judge on appeal all the questions which were specifically raised by the defendants before him were fully discussed and determined as they appear from his judgment. Therefore, the contention that the judgments are not in accordance with law is not, in our opinion, sound.

RACHAMADUGU VENKATAPATHU v. RAMADAS RAO.

As to the second contention that the findings are not sufficient to justify the inference that the land had been abandoned by the Koles I do not think that there is any substance in that contention. Upon the findings the Koles, who held a non-transferable under-raiyati right and sold their interest to defendants Nos. 1 and 3 who are in possession as such purchasers and the fact that they had let out a portion of the land to the mother of the Koles, makes no difference as to their possession of the whole. The sub-lessee of a portion of the under-raiyati from defendants Nos. 1 and 3 was in possession as tenant under defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and was equally a trespasser as against the landlord as defendants Nos. 1 and 3 were. Under the circumstances it is difficult to say that the landlord had not the right to re-enter when the original tenants after having sold their interest are no longer on the land. The case of a tenant selling a non-transferable tenancy and leaving the land after his transferee has taken possession of the land is not the same as that of a tenant who had left the land without selling it and abandoned it within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. When a tenant having no transferable interest transfers his interest and puts the transferee in possession the original tenancy may be treated as abandoned and when the transferee takes possession of the land he is no better than a trespasser as against the landlord. We might point out here that the only appellants before us are the purchasers and not the Koles who were under-raiyats under the plaintiffs.

I think, therefore, that the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are correct and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

supporting this conclusion. The appellant is entitled to the money in Court, as the assignment created in the assignors' favour a lien in the nature of a trust or a charge on the money recovered thereunder. The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs throughout.

Odgers, J.—On 23rd September 1913 the Swami of Ahobilam Mutt assigned to Rangiah and Sanjeeviah the amount due for rent and damages from one Ramappa, who had leased certain lands belonging to the mutt. The assignees were to collect the arrears of rent due from Ramappa, recover damages from him in respect of cutting trees, pay all the cost themselves in the first instance and pay over half the net proceeds to the Swami after deducting costs. Rangiah is now represented by minor petitioner-appellant, and in 1915 Sanjeeviah was adjudicated an insolvent. Certain moneys have been recovered from the lessee and are in deposit in the District Court of Kurnool. The appellant states that he paid the Swami in 1919 Rs. 1,500 and took a deed of relinquishment whereby he acquired the Swami's half shares in the net proceeds provided for by the deed of assignment. The appellant asserts that the insolvent (now represented by the Official Receiver) is entitled only to one-fourth of the amount recovered, himself being entitled to the other one-fourth which, together with the half acquired from the Swami, amounts to three-fourths of the fund in Court. The Official Receiver contends that he is entitled to half the decree amount and not one-fourth only and that as the Swami would as to his half under the assignment deed be in the position of an ordinary creditor, the appellant, by the transaction in 1919, can acquire no better rights against the insolvent's estate than the Swami and must rank as an ordinary creditor. This contention was upheld by the District Judge and the question is whether it is right, and whether under the deed of assignment the assignees were constituted trustees for the Swami as to half the proceeds they recovered. It is further contended that if they were not trustees they were agents for collection or that a charge was created on the fund recovered in favour of the Swami. In my opinion the assignment was an absolute one in favour of the assignees. "I do hereby assign to you, your heirs and assignees the amount now owing and hereafter falling due." It does not signify in this country whether the assignment is one at law by virtue of section 25 of the Judicature Act of 1873 or is only an equitable assignment. A trust in favour of the assignor, whether of the whole debt assigned or of the surplus after retention thereof of a definite sum by the assignee does not prevent the assignment being absolute; in the case of an equitable assignment a direction to pay a sum of money out of a specified debt or fund constitutes such an assignment, though not of the whole debt or fund and it is immaterial that the amount of the debt assigned is not ascertained at the date of the assignment. See per Chitty, L. J., in Durham Brothers v. Robertson, (4). This case appears to me to resemble Comfort v. Betts (1), where certain persons assigned debts due to them to the assignee to recover the same, and on recovery to pay to the assignors, respectively out of the aggregate sum recovered such proportionate part of such aggregate sum as should represent or comprise the individual debt due to them respectively or such part thereof as might have been recovered by the assignee.

The Court of Appeal held that what was intended was an absolute assignment of the debts subject to a trust for the payment of the money recovered to the creditors. In my opinion this decision is applicable to this case, the only difference here is the clause with regard to the recovery of damages, but as pointed above that is not a matter which needs consideration in this country. The intention here was to pass the whole of the assignor's interest in the debt due and in the recovery of damages. He was, however, entitled to half the net proceeds recovered. The Court of Appeal has held in the case quoted that the intention in such a case imports a trust, and following that decision, I have no doubt that it was intended by the parties here to the deed (4) (1808) 1 Q. B. 705; 67 L. J. Q. B. 464; 48 L. T. 438.

of assignment that the assignees should hold half the proceeds in trust for the assignor. The Swami would, therefore, not be in the position of an ordinary unsecured debtor with regard to the proceeds and the appellant who stands in his shoes will occupy the same position.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad of the 9th of July, 1921, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur of the 3rd September 1918.

The suit was brought by the respondents against the appellant for the possession of certain lands described in the plaint. These lands consisted of a 2 annas 8 pice share in a permanently settled mouza called Pachrokhia; and a grove No. 526 in Mouza Bahhar.

A decree has been passed substantially as prayed. The defendant appeals.

The facts raising such questions in the suit as remain for their Lordships' consideration may be compendiously stated.

The respondents have been found to be, as they alleged they were, the reversionary heirs of one Manohar Ojha who died without issue in 1856. At his death he was entitled as part of his estate to both properties in suit. In Pachrokhia, the appellant, who is the present Maharaja of Dumraon was also interested as the owner of an eight annas share.

Manohar Ojha left three childless widows surviving him. Oudha Koer was the last survivor of the three. She died in 1914. Thereupon, the succession to the estate of Manohar Ojha opened to the respondents as his reversionary heirs. After Oudha Koer's death exclusive possession of both properties in suit was found to be in the appellant under the following circumstances.

First as to Pachrokhia. That mouza was in great part diluviated, and in 1392 Oudha Koer, by the time in possession of her deceased husband's share, failed to pay her proportion of the revenue assessed upon it. The appellant had to pay the whole and he sued Oudha Koer to recover her proper proportion. In January, 1894, a decree for Rs. 564-5-4 and interest was passed in his favour and to meet this debt Oudha Koer borrowed from one Kishan Prasad the amount due, viz., Rs. 587, together with a further sum, making in all Rs. 1,000, and she gave to Kishan Prasad by way of security a mortgage of Manohar Ojha's interest in Pachrokhia, dated the 25th of December, 1899, for the whole sum borrowed.

On the 31st of March 1903, Kishan Prasad obtained a decree for the amount then due on his mortgage, and, in execution, he purchased, on the 16th of November, 1904, Manohar Ojha's two and two-third annas share in Pachrokhia and he was placed in possession.

KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. SHRO PARGASH OJHA.

Later, Kishan Prasad himself made the 16th of November, 1904, from default in payment of his share of Kishan Prasad, was subsequent to the revenue of Pachrokhia. The appellant decree and it is suggested with great force that all that was then purchased as before was compelled to pay the whole assessment. He then sued Kishan Prasad for his proportion and obtained a decree for Rs. 698-1-9. This decree he executed against the property which was purchased by him at auction on the 20th June 1912. He was placed in possession and he so remained at the death of Oudha Koer in 1914. Such was the title to this property set up by the appellant in the suit. Their Lordships will deal separately with his claim to the grove.

Now, so far, the question as to Pachrokhia, between the respondents as reversionary heirs of Manohar Ojha and the appellant would depend, primarily at least, upon the question whether the mortgage made by Oudha Koer in favour of Kishan Prasad was for legal necessity so as to be binding on the estate of Manohar Ojha. And this issue was found in favour of the respondents by the Subordinate Judge in the present suit.

In the High Court, however, the decision against the appellant was based upon another ground, dependant upon a further fact which their Lordships now proceed to state.

Immediately upon Kishan Prasad obtaining, on the 31st of March 1903, as above mentioned, his decree for sale on the basis of his mortgage of the 25th of December 1899, Dhanai Ojha, the then presumptive reversioner to the estate of Manohar Ojha, sued Kishan Prasad and Oudha Koer for a declaration that the alienation to him by the widow was, without legal necessity, that alienation and the decree obtained thereon by Kishan Prasad could not affect Pachrokhia otherwise than for the lifetime of the widow, and that neither was binding upon the reversionary body. And in that suit a decree was passed on 21st June, 1904, in the plaintiff's favour as against both the widow and Kishan Prasad.

This decree affects the appellant's claim, it is said, in two ways. First, of all, the purchase by the appellant on the 16th of November, 1904, from Kishan Prasad, was subsequent to the revenue of Pachrokhia. The appellant decree and it is suggested with great force that all that was then purchased as before was compelled to pay the whole assessment. He then sued Kishan Prasad for his proportion and obtained a decree for Rs. 698-1-9. This decree he executed against the property which was purchased by him at auction on the 20th June 1912. He was placed in possession and he so remained at the death of Oudha Koer in 1914. Such was the title to this property set up by the appellant in the suit. Their Lordships will deal separately with his claim to the grove.

Now, so far, the question as to Pachrokhia, between the respondents as reversionary heirs of Manohar Ojha and the appellant would depend, primarily at least, upon the question whether the mortgage made by Oudha Koer in favour of Kishan Prasad was for legal necessity so as to be binding on the estate of Manohar Ojha. And this issue was found in favour of the respondents by the Subordinate Judge in the present suit.

In the High Court, however, the decision against the appellant was based upon another ground, dependant upon a further fact which their Lordships now proceed to state.

Immediately upon Kishan Prasad obtaining, on the 31st of March 1903, as above mentioned, his decree for sale on the basis of his mortgage of the 25th of December 1899, Dhanai Ojha, the then presumptive reversioner to the estate of Manohar Ojha, sued Kishan Prasad and Oudha Koer for a declaration that the alienation to him by the widow was, without legal necessity, that alienation and the decree obtained thereon by Kishan Prasad could not affect Pachrokhia otherwise than for the lifetime of the widow, and that neither was binding upon the reversionary body. And in that suit a decree was passed on 21st June, 1904, in the plaintiff's favour as against both the widow and Kishan Prasad.

case of Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (2). They there observe as follows: "a reversionary heir is recognised by Courts of Law as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life. A reversionary heir thus appealing to the Court truly for the conservation and just administration of the property does so in a representative capacity, so that the corpus of the estate may pass unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion." The operation "is justified by the considerations of keeping the estate intact for the persons to whom, as reversioners, it shall ultimately and at the proper time be determined that the estate shall go." These words, in their Lordships' judgment, accurately describe in relation to this property the suit of Dhanai Ojha which eventuated in the decree of the 21st of June, 1904. That decree is binding on the appellant as the successor-in-interest of Kishan Prasad and of the benefit of it the respondents are now possessed as the heirs of Manohar Ojha in the event "entitled to the reversion." To the present case the application of this principle is obvious and eminently salutary. It would be pessimi exempli that the appellant, whose predecessor-in-interest failed on the same issue and was content to accept the adverse judgment against him, should be held entitled, years afterwards, when it might be much of the relevant evidence was no longer available, to raise the same issue all over again. Their Lordships of course recognise that the principle is less obviously just where it operates to bind the ultimate reversioners by the result of a suit in which a plaintiff had failed whose interest then merely presumptive, never ultimately matured. The danger of a feigned issue in such a suit is not to be overlooked. But this danger is mainly serious where the failure of the first suit has been brought about by fraud or collusion where, of course, further and different considerations would arise. In their Lordships' judgment there is no answer either in principle or in fact to the contention of the respondents that the decree of the 21st of June, 1904, is conclusive of their claim to this property. Their Lordships can dispose very shortly of the appellant's claim to the second property in suit—the grove. Not 528. On the death of the widow the appellant wrongfully took possession of it and he now contends that the property within the meaning of the Tenancy Act is "land held for agricultural purposes" and that the period of limitation for a suit to recover it is, under section 79 of that Act, six months only. With the High Court, their Lordships are of opinion that it is impossible to hold that that section has any application whatever to such a property as the grove in fact is.

When a Court is able to discover an equitable relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, it would be well-advised to allow the plaintiff, where the defendant has been obviously in default, to take advantage of any such equitable relief, to which he is entitled under the law, and if necessary, to treat his pleadings as amended for that purpose even at the appellate stage of the suit. JUDGMENT.

Pearson, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of the Assam Valley Districts reversing a judgment of the Munsif at Gauhati. The facts are as follows: A certain dag No. 219 belonged to the plaintiff, the first and second defendants and one Krishna Nath. They were all brothers and owned the property in equal shares. The first defendant approached the plaintiff, representing to him that he was the owner of $\frac{1}{4}$ of this dag, and agreed to sell his half share to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 800. The $\frac{1}{4}$ share purported to comprise the $\frac{1}{4}$ share belonging to the first defendant and the $\frac{1}{4}$ share belonging to Krishna Nath which, he alleged, had fallen to him by succession. Before the contract was completed, however, it appears that the plaintiff came to know that Krishna Nath's $\frac{1}{4}$ share had been in fact inherited by Krishna Nath's daughter's son. The plaintiff thereupon sued for specific performance on the footing of being entitled to the $\frac{1}{4}$ share belonging to the first defendant on a proportionate payment of Rs. 400—Rs. 200 having been already paid as earnest money by the plaintiff. The First Court decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, reversing that decision, dismissed the suit, the basis of the dismissal being that, inasmuch as section 15 of the Specific Relief Act applied to the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff would only be entitled to a decree upon the footing that he should take over the $\frac{1}{4}$ share of the first defendant in return for a payment of the whole of the consideration money of Rs. 800 agreed upon, and abandon his claim to further performance and to compensation.

It has been argued before us in appeal that, first, of all that the decision of the Trial Court was correct and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for specific performance as regards the $\frac{1}{4}$ share upon payment of Rs. 400 only. It is argued that the case falls not within section 15 but within section 16 of the Specific Relief Act. Reference is also made to the case of Krishna Chandra Dey v. W. Graham (1). The facts in that case were undoubtedly very similar to those of the present. But in that case there were two plots of land, one belonging to a stranger to the contract, in the present case the property in question was ajmal property unpartitioned belonging to the brothers in equal share. Be that as it may, I am unable to distinguish the facts of the case now before us from the facts which are given in Illustration (a) to section 15 of the Specific Relief Act, and I think the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that that was the section to be applied in the circumstances of this case.

It appears, however, that the plaintiff, who succeeded in this suit in the First Court, finding that the lower Appellate Court was likely to reverse that decision, made an offer of the full amount of Rs. 800 in return for a conveyance of the $\frac{1}{4}$ share belonging to the first defendant. The lower Appellate Court, dealing with this offer merely by saying that it was made at too late stage and that the suit was brought upon the footing that the plaintiff was entitled to conveyance of half the land on payment of Rs. 400 only.

It appears to me that when a Court is able to discover, as in this case, an equitable relief to which the party is entitled it would be well advised to allow the plaintiff, where the defendant had been so obviously in default to take advantage of any such equitable relief to which he is entitled under the law, and if necessary, to treat his pleadings as amended for that purpose. At most it would be a matter where the defendant ought to be compensated in costs for the could have no grievance except that he might possibly not have come to Court had the offer been made before the commencement of the litigation.

I think, therefore, that the appeal ought to be allowed and that an order should be made that upon the plaintiff's depositing in the First Court the sum of Rs. 600 within one month after the arrival of the record in the lower Court the defendant will execute a conveyance of his 1/4th share in the property in question. In the circumstances we think that the justice of the case will be met by making no order as to costs of this appeal or in the Courts below.

In the event of the money not being deposited within the time allowed the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Graham, J. (May 20, 1924.)—I agree.

It is stated that an additional sum of Rs. 300 has been already deposited pending the appeal. This was not brought to our attention at the time of the hearing. That being so, it will only be necessary for the plaintiff to deposit a further sum of Rs. 300 instead of six hundred rupees within one month as directed by the judgment already signed.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Phillimore.—This case involves some questions of importance. The parties are all relations, descendants of one Hanmanina. He had three children—a daughter, Basava, whose son Girimallappa Channappa Somasagar is the plaintiff and present respondent; a son Vadakappa who had two daughters, Kenchava and Gangava—who are the defendants and present appellants—and a son Hanmappa—of whom more hereafter. The third child of Hanmanna was another son, Ramanna since deceased. Ramanna married Chanbasava; they had no children, but they adopted as a son, Parappa. He died a month after Ramanna. Thereupon, his adoptive mother Chanbasava succeeded to the property for the ordinary Hindu woman's estate, and upon her death, descent would have to be traced to Parappa as the propositus, and Hanmappa if he survived. Chanbasava would be the natural heir to Parappa.

The relationships can be illustrated on a genealogical table, thus:—

HANMANNA

Vadakappa	Basava	Ramanna died 1911-12.
	Girimallappa,	Chanbasava,
	(plaintiff)	(murdered 1914)
		Parappa

Kenchava	Gangava	Hanmappa,
(defendant	(defendant	(murderer of
No. 1).	No. 2).	Chanbasava,
	Ningappa,	and transported
	(defendant	for life).
	No. 3)

In 1914 Hanmappa had a quarrel with his aunt Chanbasava and murdered her. He was tried and sentenced to transportation for life. The matter to be determined in this case is who, in these circumstances—the Hindu woman's estate of Chanbasava having been brought to an end—is to succeed as heir to Parappa's property.

The defendants, Kenchava and Gangava, the daughters of Parappa's uncle, obtained possession. Thereupon, the plaintiff, as son of Parappa's aunt, sued claiming to have a better title. The defendants, being in possession, while averring their better title—also rely as they are entitled to do, upon the contention that the real title is in or through the murderer Hanmappa.

The case, therefore, raises three questions—

Can the murderers succeed?

If not, can title be claimed through him?

If not,—and he is to be wiped out altogether—who are the heirs of Parappa?

And to this last question there are three possible answers: The three cousins may be entitled equally; or the daughters of the uncle may succeed alone; or the son of the aunt may succeed alone.

As to the first two questions the Subordinate Judge held that the matter was provided for by Hindu Law, and that this law disqualified a murderer from succeeding to an estate, the succession to which he had accelerated by killing the woman who had a previous interest during her life. But in compliance as he considered with a decision of the High Court of Madras, he held that nevertheless the murderer did take the legal estate, though he was disqualified from having any beneficial interest. He further held that this disqualification was not confined to a personal disqualification of the murderer, but wiped him out from the line of descent, so that the heirship to the propositus Parappa is to be traced directly and not through him.

The High Court came to the same conclusions, that is to say that the murderer had no title, and that the heirship was not to be traced through him, but on a somewhat different line of reasoning. The learned Judges thought that there was no Hindu Law which governed the matter, so that they had to have recourse in obedience to the Bombay Regulation of 1827, No. 4, section 26, to the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. And while thinking it immaterial whether the murderer had the legal estate vested in him or not because "in either case he must for the purpose of the inheritance be treated as if he were dead when the inheritance opened and as not being a fresh stock of descent," they thought it simpler to say that the exclusion extends to the legal as well as beneficial estate.

KENCHAYA KOMI-SANTELLAPPA-HOSMANDI. GIRIMALLAPPA-CHANNAPPA-SOMASAGAR.

Before this Board, it has been contended that the matter is governed by Hindu Law, and that the Hindu Law makes no provision disqualifying a murderer from succeeding to the estate of his victim and, therefore, it must be taken that according to this law he can succeed, and he being alive, the plaintiff has no title.

Their Lordships do not take this view. There is much to be said for the argument of the Subordinate Judge that the principles of jurisprudence which can be traced in Hindu Law, would warrant an inference that according to that law a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and that if this case had come under consideration by the Hindu sages, they would have determined it against the murderer. But it is unnecessary so to decide, because the alternative is between the Hindu Law being as above stated or being for this purpose non-existent; and in this latter case the High Court have rightly decided that the principles of equity, justice and good conscience exclude the murderer.

The English Law on this subject is based upon principle and is well settled. It is true that the reported decisions have been in cases where the murderer was a devisee or legatee under the Will of the murdered person, and that Joyce, J., in In re Houghton, Houghton v. Houghton (1) thought it a matter for consideration whether the same rule would apply in the case of an intestacy, and cited a decision of a Court in the U. S. A. by which it was held that the provisions of the Statute of Distributions were paramount and forbade the consideration of any disqualification. But the actual decision of Joyce, J., was rested upon another ground and a quite satisfactory one, and their Lordships are unable to follow the reasoning of the learned American Judge. Statutes regulating heirship or descent, or giving force to Wills and to the devises contained in Wills should be read as not intended to affect paramount questions of public policy or depart from well-settled principles of jurisprudence.

In their Lordships' view it was rightly held by the two Courts below that the murderer was disqualified, and with regard to the question whether he is disqualified wholly or only as to the beneficial interest which the Subordinate Judge discussed, founding upon the distinction between the beneficial and legal estate which was made by the Subordinate Judge, and by the High Court of Madras in the case of Vadayanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (2), their Lordships reject, as did the High Court, here, any such distinction. The theory of legal and equitable estates is no part of Hindu Law and should not be introduced into discussion.

The second question to be decided is whether title can be claimed through the murderer. If this were so, the defendants as the murderer's sisters would take precedence of the plaintiff, his cousin. In this matter also their Lordships are of opinion that the Courts below were right. The murderer should be treated as non-existent and not as one who forms the stock for a fresh line of descent. It may be pointed out that this view was also taken in the Madras case just cited.

It was contended that a different ruling was to be extracted from the decision of the Bombay High Court in Gangu v. Chandrabhagabai (3). This is not so. In that case, the wife of a murderer was held entitled to succeed to the estate of the murdered man, but that was not because the wife deduced title through her husband, but because of the principle of Hindu family Law that a wife becomes a member of her husband's gotra; an actual relation of her husband's relations in her own right, as it is called in Hindu Law a gotraja-sapinda. The decision, therefore, has no bearing on the present case.

It remains to be determined whether as between the appellants and the respondent—all three being first cousins of the propositus—any distinction is to be made by reason of their sex or the sex of their parents. The Subordinate

Judge thought that there was no distinction to be made between bandhus of equal nearness; and that all took equally, and so he gave to the plaintiff a third of the property.

Both parties appealed to the High Court, which held that as between bandhus of equal nearness to the propositus, male members of the family were preferred to female, and gave judgment that the plaintiff should take the whole.

The case against this decision has been very fully argued before their Lordships by Counsel for the defendants-appellants. He brought a number of authorities before their Lordships for review, all of which have been considered.

In the result, however, for the purposes of this case, the matter can be brought into a short compass. Both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court agreed—indeed the Subordinate Judge said it was conceded in argument on both sides—that the plaintiff and the defendants are bandhus (bhinna gotra, spindas) of an equal degree being sapindas within four degrees of the common ancestor. This being so, no reason is shown in their Lordships' opinion why the defendants as daughters of the deceased father should take in preference to the plaintiff, who is the son of the deceased father's sister. So far again both Courts are in agreement, and their Lordships are in agreement with both Courts. That leaves to be determined the point on which the two Courts differ, the Subordinate Judge having held that all three should share alike, and the High Court having given preference to the plaintiff as being a male.

Now it was decided by the High Court of Madras in 1889, in the case of Narasimma v. Mangammal (4) that a father's sister was postponed to a mother's brother by reason of the general preference given among bandhus to male over female heirs. This decision was quoted without disapproval by their Lordships on this Board in the case of Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (5).

But the High Court of Bombay in 1902 in the case of Saguna v. Sadashiv (6) came to the conclusion that, however, this might be in Madras it was different in Bombay. The Judges gave preference to the father's half-sister over the mother's brother, and did not follow the case of Narasimma v. Mangammal (4), which was quoted to them. And it was upon this decision of the High Court of Bombay that the main argument of Counsel for the appellants was founded.

When analysed, however, the decision of the Bombay Court comes to this only: There may or may not be a preference among bandhus of males over females, if they are otherwise in the same position; but there is a prior and paramount enquiry whether they are bandhus on the father's side or on the mother's side—those on the father's side having at the precedence.

The question of priority as between atma bandhus ex parte paterna and those ex parte materna has been the subject of much discussion—the latest word on the subject being found in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (5) which decided in 1921 that as between pitrubandhus and matrubandhus the preference given to the former is settled.

The case now before their Lordships is not affected, however, by these considerations, as both sets of claimants are related on the father's side.

In 1908, the High Court of Madras in Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur v. Rajah Surenani Venkata Purushothama Jagannadha Gopalai Rao Bahadur (7), again decided that in that Presidency a male bandhu is entitled to preference over a female bandhu, even though the latter is nearer in degree. Saguna v. Sadashiv (6) was not referred to in the judgment, but it was unnecessary because there was no contest between maternal and paternal bandhus.

Then in Balkrishna Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadhar (8) decided in 1920 by the High Court of Bombay—consisting of the same Judges who decided the case now under appeal—the authority of Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur v. Rajah Surenani Venkata Purushothama Jagannadha Gopala Row Bahadur (7) was followed. The principle that among bandhus the male is entitled to preference over the female—even though the latter is nearer in degree—was accepted as being law for the Bombay Presidency as much as for the Madras Presidency; and preference was given to a mother's sister's son over a brother's daughter. In that particular case the actual decision would appear to conflict with Saguna v. Sadashiv (6) because it apparently ignored the supposed prior and paramount claim of paternal over maternal bandhus; and it would seem that for some unaccountable reason, Saguna v. Sadashiv (6) was not cited to the Court. Whenever, therefore, the two conflicting principles of preference of the paternal over the maternal line and preference of the male over the female sex, in the Presidency of Bombay, have to be weighed, the Court which weighs them will have to choose between these two decisions of the High Court.

But it will be seen from this summary that there is no case in the Bombay Presidency which decides that some preference is not to be given to male bandhus over female. And there is no doubt, indeed the learned Counsel for the appellants did not contend that there was any doubt, that throughout the rest of India, preference for the male would be certain.

This being so, their Lordships are of opinion that the case was rightly decided by the High Court of Bombay, and that this appeal should be dismissed,

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit brought by him for recovery of arrears of rent at a rate which was agreed between the parties by a registered kabuliyat dated the 23rd of May 1916. The facts which are necessary for the determination of this appeal are as follows. One Samir the predecessor of the defendants was by a right of inheritance entitled to one-fifth share of an occupancy holding. He purchased also a non-transferable occupancy holding which belonged to somebody else. He approached his landlord and prayed for sub-division of his ancestral holding and also for recognition of his right as a purchaser of the occupancy holding which he had bought. It seems that the parties agreed and the result of that agreement was the kabuliyat which I have already mentioned. By that kabuliyat the one-fifth share which Samir inherited was amalgamated with the land he had purchased and a new holding was created at a rental of Rs. 15-7-0. In arriving at that sum the kabuliyat states that the rent of the old holding was taken to be Rs. 46-12-6 and the rent of the purchased jote of Samir was taken to be Rs. 5-8-3. The one-fifth of the rent of the jote together with the rent of the purchased jote was Rs. 15-7-0 and that is the rent which Samir agreed to pay for the consolidated holding which was created by that kabuliyat. The rent due under that kabuliyat for the years 1323 to 1326 is the subject-matter of the present suit.

The defence of the defendants who were the representatives of Samir was that the kabuliyat was not voluntarily executed by Samir, that he was not cognizant of the terms of the kabuliyat and in fact the kabuliyat was extorted by force. They further contended that the rent was not realizable because it contravenes the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

This suit was tried along with other suits and we are concerned with Suit No. 530 out of the three suits tried together. The learned Munsif found that the kabuliyat was executed voluntarily and with full knowledge of its contents and that it was validly executed. The learned Munsif, however, gave effect to the second defence and reduced the rent from Rs. 15-7-0 to Rs. 12-5-11 per annum and made a modified decree on that basis. On appeal by the landlord plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge has affirmed the decree of the Munsif and the present appeal is by the plaintiff against the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

It was contended in appeal by Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray, the learned Vakil, for the appellant, first that the kabuliyat having been found to have been duly executed and to be valid deed the plaintiff was entitled to a decree at the rate of Rs. 15-7-0 as agreed between the parties and evidenced by the kabuliyat. The next contention of the learned Vakil was that as the kabuliyat had been allowed to stand unquestioned the defendants were not entitled to object to one of its terms without previously having sought either to rescind or reform the contract and thirdly it was contended that there was really no contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the claim by the plaintiff in the present suit.

I think these contentions are sound. It is to be regretted that the respondents do not appear in the present appeal. The kabuliyat really is for a consolidated new holding created by the amalgamation of a part of the old occupancy holding with the land of another occupancy holding which was non-transferable but to the transfer of which the landlord gave his consent and agreed to create the tenancy evidenced by the kabuliyat. As there was a promise to pay Rs. 15-7-0 as rent of this new holding the defence of the defendants that the contract was not binding on the ground that it was taken by force having failed there is absolutely no reason why the landlord should not be entitled to claim rent as settled by that kabuliyat. There is no question of any enhancement here of any existing tenancy. It was really a tenancy created for the first time. It has been held in numerous cases that a tenancy created by amalgamated additional land with an existing occupancy holding is not controlled by section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this connection the learned Vakil refers to the case of Garibulla Sheikh v. Jnanada Sundari (1). The principle laid down in that case.

U SHWE MIN v. MAUNG MAUNG GYI.

this contract contravenes the terms of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this case a fresh rent was settled for a new tenancy. There is no question of enhancement of the rent of an existing holding here. That tenancy so far as Samir was concerned came to an end. This is not a case of enhancement of rent of an existing holding. The present suit was not for the enhanced rent but for recovery of the rent at the rate of Rs. 15-7-0 which the tenant agreed to pay for the new holding created in the circumstances already stated.

On these grounds, I think the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. In the result the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for rent at the rate mentioned in the kabulyat. The appeal is decreed with costs in all the Courts.

Probate and Administration Act (V. of 1881), ss. 70, 71, 83—Civil Procedure Code, (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 15—Caveat, form of—Procedure in contentious cases

In contentious cases under the Probate and Administration Act the provisions of that Act read with the Civil Procedure Code should be followed with regard to the filing and the form of caveats and the procedure to be adopted. [p. 974, col. 2.]

Caveats under section 70 of the Probate and Administration Act should be in the form prescribed in section 71 and in contentious cases, the objections to the grant and the reply thereto should be in the form of pleadings properly verified in accordance with the provisions of O. VI, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code. The proceedings thereafter should take the form of a suit in which issues should be framed and parties examined on oath. [p. 974, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Original Side, in C. M. No. 4 of 1923.

Mr. Keith, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order passed in the Original Jurisdiction of the High Court refusing Letters of Administration to appellants, who claim to be the father and younger sister of one Ma Han, who died on the 20th July 1922. The main objections to the order are that it was passed merely on statements made in Court which have not been deposed to on oath; that appellants being the father and younger sister of the deceased were the natural parties to whom letters should in the ordinary course have been granted, and no evidence had been produced to disqualify them; and that as appellants would give security in the event of obtaining Letters of Administration, such security would safeguard any rival claimants.

Apparently Ma Han was living with one Krishunswamy as his wife, or at least the appellants describe Krishunswamy as her husband, and they state that Ma Han jointly carried on business with her husband Krishunswamy and acquired properties as stall-keepers in Surtes Bara Bazar in stalls which were described in their petition as Nos. 249 A, 250, 251 and 205, but in their petition they omitted No. 250.

The objectors are Ma Thuza an elder sister of the deceased Ma Han, and Maung Aung Gyi, an uncle of the deceased Ma Han. It was pointed out that the latter as uncle had no locus standi and that objection was accepted by the Court, but notice that in the original application filed by these objectors in Civil Miscellaneous No. 202 of 1922 in which they had applied that the Administrator General be directed to collect the assets of the deceased and to realize the same under the direction of the Court, Maung Aung Gyi also claimed to be a creditor of the estate to the extent of Rs. 350 and if he can substantiate such claim, he too would have as creditor right to be heard on the question in dispute.

ABDUL SAMAD V. GUNENDRA KRISHNA ROY.

There appears to be a dispute as to what are the assets of the estate of Ma Han. The objectors in the original application referred to some stalls of which only two are referred to against the four in the first application of appellants, and the objectors also referred to such six stalls as completely belonging to the estate. On the other hand, Krishnswamy in a petition of opposition stated that the deceased had no property at all and that three of such six stalls did not belong either to him or to the deceased, that two belonged solely to him (Krishnswamy) and that the other two Nos. 250 and 251 were in his name, and it may be that considerable significance should be attached to that differentiation between stalls belonging to him and stalls in his name.

It would seem possible that this unavailing opposition of Krishnswamy in Civil Miscellaneous No. 202 of 1922 was the cause of appellants coming on the scene in the same record where the Advocate for Krishnswamy is recorded as supporting the application as against the Administrator General.

The appellants then filed the application, Civil Miscellaneous No. 4 of 1923, which gave rise to the order which is now appealed against. The respondents filed an unverified petition of opposition and the appellants then filed an unverified petition in reply to such opposition, and it was on the unverified petition that the order appealed against was passed.

The objectors ignored the provisions of sections 70 and 71 of the Probate and Administration Act as to the practice of filing a caveat and the form which such caveat should take. The objectors have also ignored the provisions of section 83 of that Act which prescribed the procedure which should have been adopted in contentious cases: under that provision the grounds of objection should have been in the form of a pleading and properly verified in accordance with the provisions of O. VI, r. 15. Similarly the reply of the appellants should have been properly verified, and the proceedings should then have taken the form of a suit in which an issue should be framed and the parties should be examined on oath.

An objection has been taken to this absence of formality and the failure to prove the allegation on oath. I think that we are bound to remand the case for trial in the ordinary course in accordance with these provisions of the Probate and Administration Act, read with the Code of Civil Procedure. This order does not imply that we are expressing any opinion as to the merits of the case. I would let each party bear his own costs in both Courts up to date.

ABDUL SAMAD & GUNENDRA KRISHNA ROY.

Babus Gunoda Charan Sen and De-bendra Chandra Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Conscious as I am of the restricted powers that we exercise in second appeals I hesitated a good deal before deciding whether I should interfere with the finding of the lower Appellate Court in these cases to the effect that the presumption arising from the entries made in the finally published Record of Rights has not been rebutted. Having regard, however, to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the cases I think I should interfere. If a Court of second appeal can interfere with a finding of fact when that finding is based on no evidence, if it can interfere with a finding of fact when the finding is arrived at without reference to the evidence on the record, if an inference as to facts can be interfered with when it is not warranted by the facts found, I do not see why a Court of second appeal should not interfere with a supposed finding of fact when that finding is arrived at upon an erroneous supposition as to matters which are not to be found on the record.

What has happened in the present cases is this: The plaintiffs instituted the suits out of which these two appeals have arisen for recovery of rent for the years 1323 to 1326 B. S. on the basis of the rents mentioned in the finally published Record of Rights. The defendants produced certain dakhilas in order to show that the rents which they had been paying were actually less than those which were mentioned in the finally published Record of Rights. The plaintiffs did not produce the collection papers. Whether they did that intentionally or otherwise is a matter which I shall deal with presently. The Court of first instance held that the presumption arising from the entries in the finally published Record of Rights had been rebutted and that the rates of rent which the defendants said were the rates at which they had been paying had been proved and, in that view, that Court gave the plaintiffs decrees in the two suits on the basis of those rates. On appeals being preferred by the plaintiffs, the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the two suits on the basis of the rents mentioned in the finally published Record of Rights. His decision is substantially upon these grounds. The first is that no blame attached to the plaintiffs for the non-production of the collection papers. With regard to the collection papers, the learned Judge observed in his judgment as follows: "The learned lower Court has found fault with the plaintiffs for non-production of plaintiffs' collection papers. The papers were, in fact, produced though at a very late stage; but the learned lower Court refused to accept them. The onus of rebutting the Record of Rights is upon the defendants. The defendants should have rather asked the Court to take in these papers instead of objecting to their reception in evidence." From these observations it would seem as if the plaintiffs had produced the collection papers though at a late stage of the case and that the defendants objected to their reception on the ground that they had not been put in proper time and that therefore it was the defendants who were to blame for the collection papers not being on the record. The facts, however, are otherwise. It appears from the statements made by the learned Vakils appearing on behalf of the parties before me as also upon an examination of the Records that some of these collection papers were produced by the plaintiffs on the 29th September 1920, and another batch of collection papers was produced by them on the 17th November 1920. Later on, the exact date does not appear, these papers were taken back by the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs' witness No. 1 in his evidence before the Court stated that the collection papers could not be produced inasmuch as there was some litigation pending between the plaintiffs and their co-sharers. This being the state of facts, it is curious that the learned Subordinate Judge should assume that it was the defendants who were responsible for the collection papers not being put in evidence. So much for the collection papers.

The second ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment is based is that, in his opinion the dakhilas which the defendants had produced had not been (to use the words of the learned Judge himself) "satisfactorily proved." What he means by this expression, it is difficult to understand for it appears that these dakhilas were produced in the Trial Court by the defendants, that they were spoken to by the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants and that they were marked as Exhibits in the cases without any objection on the side of the plaintiffs. If the learned Subordinate Judge meant that the dakhilas were not genuine, there is no reason why he should not have said so expressly in his judgment. If, however, he referred to the fact that the dakhilas had not been properly proved, that is to say, approved in accordance with law, in my opinion, he was not right in taking that view. In the first place, the persons who produced these dakhilas stated in Court that there were the dakhilas which had been received either by them or by others, from whom they had received them, on payment of rent to the plaintiffs and it is well known that this is one of the ways in which dakhilas can be proved in a suit. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the case of Surja Kanta Acharjee v. Banerwar Shaha (1) wherein, relying upon the cases of Raj Mahomed v. Banoo Rasmah (2) and Madhub Chunder Chowdhry v. Promotho Nath Roy (3), this Court held that where the genuineness of a rent receipt is sworn to by the tenant by whom the rent has been paid that is legally sufficient to prove the receipt notwithstanding that the person whose signature it bears has not been examined. To add to this there is the fact which cannot be lost sight of, namely, that no objection was taken on behalf of the plaintiffs to the reception of these dakhilas in evidence and to their being marked as exhibits in the cases. As observed in the case of Rajeswari Dasi v. Pulin Behary Mittra (4) where rent receipts were admitted in evidence without objection in the Court of first instance, no objection could be taken in the Appellate Court that they were not properly proved. In fact, this proposition rests upon a well-known principle with regard to the rule of evidence and that is, this. Where an objection has got to be taken as to the mode of proof of a particular document, such objection must be taken at the time when the document is tendered for admission, for any lacuna in the mode of proof may then be at once supplied by the party who produces the document and wants to have it proved. The third ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has proceeded is that "the dakhilas are of much prior dates." "It seems to me," says the learned Judge, "that they" that is, the defendants, have withheld some dakhilas. In making this observation, it seems that the learned Subordinate Judge has wholly misconceived the situation. It appears from an examination of the dakhilas themselves, that some of them ran quite up to the year 1322 B. S. and showed payment of rent for that year, that year being the one immediately preceding the period 1323 to 1326 B. S. for which rents have been claimed in these suits. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, proceeded entirely upon a misconception with regard to all these matters and the finding arrived at by him based on such misconception. The finding to the effect that the presumption arising from the Record of Rights finally published has not been rebutted on account of these facts cannot be touched as a finding of fact in second appeal. I would, therefore, set aside the decrees passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and remit the two appeals to his Court to be dealt with afresh in the light of the observations that have been made above. Costs will abide the result.

—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 76—Shares, whether goods—Property in shares, how passes—Delivery of share certificates, effect of—Unpaid vendor, position of—Lien—Suit to recover purchase-money

Plaintiff sold 129 shares to defendant No. 1 Defendant sold 25 of these to a third party and pledged 104 along with 201 similar shares to defendant No. 2 Defendant No. 2 put forward defendant No. 3 as a party who was willing to advance money In fact defendant No. 3 was a mere nominee of defendant No. 2 Defendant No. 2 got possession of these 305 shares by fraudulently representing that he would use their shares for the purpose of raising a loan for defendant No. 1 which he did not do and which he did not intend to do, his real object being to secure himself from loss as regards the moneys due to him by defendant No. 1 Plaintiff thereupon sued to recover the shares or their price and by way of damages the difference in the price of those shares on the date on which they were demanded back and the price on the date of decree.

Held, (1) that the plaintiff had no cause of action against defendants Nos. 2 and 3; [p. 981, col. 2]

(2) that all that plaintiff was entitled to was a decree against defendant No. 1 for the unpaid purchase-money as he had no lien for it; [p. 983, col. 1]

(3) that the plaintiff had no title either in law or in equity to the shares and could not get back the share certificates or claim damages [p. 983, col. 1]

Per Macleod, C. J.—Shares are goods within the meaning of section 76 of the Contract Act. They are, however, a peculiar kind of moveable property which cannot pass from hand to hand. The property in these shares belongs to the registered share-holder and cannot be transferred to another except according to the articles of the Company. [p. 980, col. 2]

The only inquiry which a holder of shares can be put to by reason of the nature or character of the documents which come into his possession is with regard to the action of the registered holder. He cannot be put to enquiry with regard to the rights and liabilities of intermediate holders. [p. 983, col. 1]

Per Crump, J.—Delivery of the transfers and share certificates passes not the property in the shares but a title legal and equitable which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares. [p. 984, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Kajiji, J. who passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against all the three defendants.

The principal facts are not in dispute. Plaintiff No. 1 is a certified broker. Plaintiff No. 2 is said to be a sub-broker working under him. It is not clear what the term 'sub-broker' implies. There appears to have been some sort of arrangement between plaintiff No. 1 and plaintiff No. 2 that plaintiff No. 2 should induce business on behalf of plaintiff No. 1 and should obtain remuneration in the shape of a share in the brokerage for such business, but it is not disputed that in this case plaintiff No. 2 conducted the business in his own name. In my opinion the term 'sub-broker' should not be used as it has no legal significance and may only lead to confusion of ideas. The learned Judge says that it is a fact of which even judicial notice can be taken that where a sub-broker issues contracts in his own name and the head-broker allows him to do so, the party dealing with the sub-broker always looks to the sub-broker for the performance of the contract. With due respect I cannot agree. The terms 'head-broker' and 'sub-broker' may or may not be a convenient method of expressing the relationship between plaintiff No 1 and plaintiff No. 2, but it is inadvisable to introduce into legal language terms which require explanation when the ordinary terms will suffice. Plaintiff No. 2 may have been the agent of plaintiff No 1 to enter into contract in his behalf, or he may have been an employee of plaintiff No. 1 so that the law of principal and agent, or master and servant, respectively, would be applicable. As the plaintiff No 2 entered into contracts in his own name, it would depend upon evidence whether he was acting on his own behalf or on behalf of an undisclosed principal, or on behalf of a principal whose name was given to the other contracting party, and consequently on the facts proved the rights and liabilities of the various parties would have to be decided. I cannot see myself what interest plaintiff No 1 had in this suit except to sue on Gora's cheque unless it can be said that plaintiff No 2 was acting as the agent of plaintiff No 1. It was plaintiff No. 2 who contracted in March 1920 to sell 150 shares in Alcock Ashdown & Co., Ltd, to the first defendant Esmail Gora, a certified broker. Plaintiff No. 2 was not a certified broker and so we are not concerned with any terms which may be implied in a contract between certified brokers. In all the transactions in suit the parties acted as principals and not on behalf of clients. In pursuance of his contract plaintiff No 2 handed over to Gora, on April 14, being payment day, certificates for 129 shares with their respective transfer forms signed in blank by the registered share-holders. The amount to be paid according to the rules, on that day was Rs 1,54,800 and at about 8 p. m. Gora handed to plaintiff No 2 a cheque for that amount drawn in favour of plaintiff No 1. The cheque was dishonoured on presentation the next day.

It will now be necessary to consider what were the dealings of Gora in shares in Alcock Ashdown & Co for the April settlement. He had been buying the market, buying largely from defendant No 2 and others. Exhibit 5 at page 2, Part III, is his account with defendant No. 2. Between February 18 and March 9, he had bought 460 shares, though Manilal said he had bought 463, at prices ranging from Rs 1,305 to 1,505 of which thirty-one were sold before April 14. He took delivery on the 14th of 368 shares, and gave a cheque for Rs. 4,41,600 at Rs. 1,200 per share, the rate fixed by the Association on payment day. The final adjustment was to take place on April 17 when a very considerable amount more would have to be paid to defendant No 2 on the 368 shares, apart from what was due for differences on the shares of which delivery was not taken and on other accounts. In addition to the 368 shares, Gora had obtained 129 from the plaintiff No. 2, 56 from one Dave to whom he had given a cheque for Rs 67,200, and 16 from other sources making a total of 569 shares. He delivered 264 to one Nemchand, receiving a cheque from him for Rs. 3,16,800 at Rs 1,200 per share. Out of the 264 shares 25 shares were part of the 129 he had received from plaintiff No 2. Gora thus had 305 shares left with him of which 104 had come from plaintiff No 2. His position was then desperate. Apart from other liabilities he had issued cheques on the 14th for Rs. 4,41,600, Rs 1,54,800 and Rs. 67,200 a total of Rs 6,63,600 which he could not hope to meet unless he realised the full value on the 305 shares. His own story is as follows. On April 15, he went with Nemchand's cheque for Rs 3,16,800 and the 305 shares to the Bank of India. Whilst waiting to receive payment for the cheque he saw Manilal a partner in defendant No. 2's firm. He explained his difficulties to Manilal, who said he had a friend who would advance money on the 305 shares at Rs 1,200. Gora gave Manilal the 3,16,800 rupees which he got for the cheque of Nemchand, and the 305 shares, in order that he might arrange the loan. Manilal knew the amounts of the cheques given to plaintiff No 2 and Dave which had to be met. Gora met Manilal again in the evening at Manilal's residence when according to him he was asked to sign two documents which he did without reading them. One was a document of pledge, the other a promissory note for Rs 3,50,000. Exhibits M and N. Both were made out in the name of Maganlal C. Ghia whom up to that time Gora had neither seen nor heard of. The pledge document referred to three cheques for Rs. 1,24,800, Rs 75,200 and Rs 1,50,000 as having been received by Gora but as a matter of fact no cheques were given to him. It certainly seems extraordinary that Gora should have left without receiving any of the money, of which he was so urgently in need, in exchange for the 305 shares. On the 17th he received a letter dated the 16th, Exhibit V, from Mr. Kanga, a Pleader practising at the Police Courts, purporting to act on behalf of Ghia. It alleged that Gora had already received two cheques from Ghia aggregating Rs. 2,00,000 but as his client had then received information which made him apprehensive that there would be a difficulty in getting the pledged shares transferred to his name, he had told Gora he would not pay the balance of Rs. 1,50,000 until the shares were transferred to his name. Gora was, therefore, to co-operate in getting the shares transferred. On the 19th Messrs. Soonderdas & Co., wrote a reply on behalf of Gora, Exhibit 5, stating that the transaction referred to had not been correctly represented and asked for inspection of the writing and the two cheques. On the 16th Gora had written two letters for plaintiff No. 2 and Dave to deliver to Manilal, asking him to give cheques to plaintiff No. 2 and Dave for sums of Rs. 1,54,800 and Rs. 67,200 respectively. Exhibit D is the letter in respect of the cheque to be given to plaintiff No. 2. Manilal admitted he had received these letters asking for cheques: see page 94. Plaintiff No. 2 and Dave told Gora that Manilal had promised to pay them when the Bazar closed, but eventually when he heard the cheques had not been given he went to the office of defendant No. 2 where there was a meeting, at which Mr. Devidas, a partner in the firm of Motchand and Devidas who had acted generally as Gora's solicitors, was present. After a long discussion no arrangement was arrived at. The following is the note in Mr. Devidas's diary:

"16th April. Attending with Esmail Gora at the residence of Mr. Mohanlal, having a long interview. Matter could not be amicably settled. Engaged three hours at night."

It is not necessary to detail further what happened thereafter. The 305 shares remained with defendant No. 2, and Gora received nothing for the document of pledge which he had signed. He was declared a defaulter on April 19. Sometime after August he left India from Porebunder for South Africa where his evidence was taken on commission. With regard to defendant No. 2 his main complaint is, that Manilal promised to give him cheques for Rs. 1,54,800, and Rs. 67,200 to pay plaintiff No. 2 and Dave on pledge of the 305 shares and he did not do so. Before dealing with Manilal's evidence as to what happened between him and Gora with regard to the pledge of the 305 shares, it is necessary to dispose of the third defendant who Manilal had finally to admit, was his nominee. The case as first presented was that Ghia was the friend whom Manilal had induced to advance three and-a-half lacs on pledge of the 305 shares out of which Rs. 2,00,000 were paid by Gora to defendant No. 2 towards the amount due to him. Ghia had an account with the Bank of Morvi into which Manilal paid Rs. 2,00,000 on April 16 against which Ghia drew two cheques for Rs. 1,24,000 and Rs. 75,200 in favour of Esmail Gora dated April 15. He also drew a third cheque for Rs. 1,50,000 which was never used. We have here the old story of the money-lender who has no money to advance himself but has a friend who will oblige the borrower.

Manilal in his evidence endeavoured to maintain the defence set up in the written statement, but the whole of his evidence may be discarded as an elaborate tissue of falsehoods. It is certain that he knew what Gora's position was on April 14 and 15. Whether or not he actually promised to enable Gora to pay the plaintiff No. 2 and Dave, he was solely concerned to secure himself and obtain possession of the 305 shares without paying Gora anything. Ghia had in fact no concern with any of the transactions and his name was only used by Manilal to cloak his own dealings. Reference may here be made to Exhibit V, which was a letter written by Motichand and Devidas on behalf of defendant No. 2 to the agents of Alcock Ashdown & Co, asking them not to transfer any of the 368 shares which they had sold to Gora, on the ground that the cheque for Rs. 4,41,600 had been dishonoured. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that instructions were given for that letter on the 15th though it is not quite clear why they could not have been given on the 16th. However that may be, defendant No. 2 had already received Rs. 3,16,800 on account of those shares on the 15th together with the certificates for the 305 shares on which a loan was to be obtained, so that the object in writing that letter could only have been a dishonest one. On the facts, therefore, I am entirely in accord with the conclusion of the learned Judge.

I now come to the actual terms of the decree passed by him.—

1. The plaintiffs were held entitled to the 129 shares the numbers of which were annexed in Schedule A to the decree

2. Gora was ordered to deliver to the plaintiffs 129 shares or to pay Rs. 1,54,000 and costs

3. 104 shares out of the 129 were declared to be in the possession of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, defendant No. 3 being a nominee of the defendant No. 2.

4. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were ordered to deliver to the plaintiffs the 104 shares.

5. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were ordered to pay to the plaintiffs by way of damages Rs. 71,500 being the difference between the rate of Rs. 1,200 and the rate of Rs. 512-8 their value at the date of the decree.

6. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were to account for all dividends recovered by them on the 104 shares after April 20, 1920.

The grounds in law for this decree are to be found in the following passage in the judgment.—

"Gora was only an ostensible owner and the plaintiffs who were the unpaid vendors had the equity in them and they could have stopped Gora from getting these shares transferred in his name in the books of the Company but if Gora had passed on these shares either by way of sale or by way of pledge to any third person who acted bona fide and without notice then I certainly think that such a person would have had a better title to these shares than the plaintiffs. But in this case it is abundantly clear that Gora himself felt that he was not the owner. Manilal had notice that these shares were not paid for and Ghia being a mere nominee of Manilal, was in no better position than Manilal himself. They took these shares with this infirmity from Gora and, therefore, they cannot claim these shares in priority to the plaintiffs."

Sir Thomas Stangman for the appellant, defendant No. 2, began his argument by contending that as shares were goods, section 121 of the Indian Contract Act applied so that if the vendor of the shares sold them on credit his only remedy, if the purchaser defaulted, was to sue for the price, and he could not follow the goods into the hands of third parties. Admitting that shares are goods, the first question is how are they delivered in pursuance of a contract for sale? Shares are a peculiar kind of moveable property which cannot pass from hand to hand like bales of cotton. The property in these shares belonged to the registered share-holder and could not be transferred to another except according to the Articles of the Company. Article 42 is as follows:

"The instrument of transfer of any share in the Company shall be executed by the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain the holder of the said share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register of members in respect thereof."

VADILAL SARABHAI v. MANEKJI PESTONJI.

Lord Watson said in Golonial Bank v. Cady (p 277) (1).

"The appellants' witnesses say that delivery of the certificate, with the transfer executed in blank, passes the property of the shares, but that statement must be accepted subject to the explanations by which it is qualified. The right of the holder appears from these explanations to be in the nature of a jus ad rem and not of a jus in re. Delivery does not invest him with the ownership of the shares in the sense that no further act is required in order to perfect his right. Notwithstanding his having parted with the certificate and transfer, the original transferor who is entered as owner in the certificate and register, continues to be the only share-holder recognised by the Company as entitled to vote and draw dividends in respect of the shares, until the transferee or holder for the time being obtains registration in his own name. It would, therefore, be more accurate to say that such delivery passes, not the property of the shares, but a title, legal and equitable, which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares without risk of his right being defeated by any other person deriving title from the registered owner."

As that case has been relied on for other purposes it is necessary to consider the facts in order to realise what is actually decided. The registered owner of shares in a New York Company died. His executors obtained Probate and in order that the shares might be registered in their own names signed as executors the transfers on the back of the certificates and without filling in the blank handed them to their brokers, who fraudulently deposited them with a Bank which took them bona fide and without notice as security for advances. The Bank took no steps to get themselves registered in the books of the Company. It was held that the conduct of the executors in delivering the transfers was consistent either with an intention to sell or pledge the shares or to have themselves registered as the owners and, therefore, did not estop them from setting up their title as against the Bank.

As Lord Watson said, the only question in the case was whether the respondents were estopped from saying that Blakeway (the broker) had not then authority to dispose of the certificates in question. That his Lordship answered in the negative because the documents were not 'in order', or in other words were not accepted in commercial circles as sufficient vouchers of title, unless they were accompanied by an extract of the Probate and an attestation of the genuineness of the executor's signature by the United States Consul or other competent officer. When, therefore, plaintiff No. 2 parted with the certificates and blank transfers he was not the registered holder, nor had he any title left in him to enable him to vest himself with the shares. Having no title to anything it is thus difficult to see what cause of action he had against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. He had done all he could to deliver the shares, and if the blank for the transferee's name was filled in that person alone would have the right to apply to the Company to recognise him as the registered holder. As the blanks in the transfers for the said shares were never filled in it is not necessary to consider what the legal rights of the transferee would be against the registered holder if the Company refused to recognise the transfer. Now the legal position as between the plaintiff No. 2 and Gora was entirely different from the legal position as between plaintiff No. 2 and defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the failure to recognise that vitiates the whole of the Advocate-General's argument before us. The plaintiff No. 2 could have filed a suit against Gora for the price, and by way of attachment before judgment would probably have been able to prevent him from dealing with the shares if he still held the certificates and transfers. The Advocate-General argued that there were contesting equities between plaintiffs, Gora, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but the plaintiff No. 2 had no equity against the others, he had only a remedy against Gora on the contract for failure to pay the price. If he had asked the Company not to recognise a transferee who asked to be placed on the Company's register as a share-holder, he would have been told that the only person the Company recognised was the registered holder, and they had no concern with the various persons through whose hands the blank transfers passed before they were filled in.

The case of France v. Clark (2) was relied upon by the Advocate-General. There the registered holder of shares in a Company deposited the certificate with C as security for £150, and gave him a blank transfer signed by F. C deposited the certificate and the blank transfer with Q as security for £250. C died insolvent after which Q filled in his own name as transferee and sent in the transfer for registration. F gave notice to the Company but whether before or after the transfer was registered was doubtful on the evidence. It was held that Q had no title against F except to the extent of what was due from F to C. Lord Selborne said (page 262):—

"The defence of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, by any one who takes from another without inquiry an instrument signed in blank by a third party, and then himself fills up the blanks, appears to us to be altogether untenable. The person who has signed a negotiable instrument in blank, or with blank spaces, is (on account of the negotiable character of that instrument) estopped by the law merchant from disputing any alteration made in the document, after it has left his hands, by filling up blanks (or otherwise in a way not ex facie fraudulent) as against the bona fide holder for value without notice, but it has been repeatedly explained that this estoppel is in favour only of such a bona fide holder, and a man who, after taking it in blank, has himself filled up the blanks in his own favour without the consent or knowledge of the person to be bound, has never been treated in English Courts as entitled to the benefit of that doctrine."

And at page 263.

"It was said that when a man, in a transaction for value, does what this plaintiff did, and delivers a blank form of transfer to a creditor by way of security, together with the certificate of shares, his meaning must necessarily be that the creditor may complete his security by obtaining registration of the shares, either in his own or (possibly) in some other name, and that he, therefore, entrusts him with the requisite authority for that purpose. Granting this, what follows? Only that the creditor to whom such an authority is given may execute it or not, for the purpose of giving effect to the contract in his own favour, as he pleases; but not that, if he does not execute it, he can delegate the like authority to a stranger for purposes foreign to and possibly (as in this case) in fraud of that contract."

"But it was pressed on us that the plaintiff had, by the blank transfer and certificate, enabled Clark to represent himself as the true owner of the shares, or as having power to deal with the shares as owner. The documents themselves showed that Clark was not the owner. Nor was there any evidence of any mercantile usage to the effect that holders of such documents as Clark handed over to Quinhampton are treated as having the right to transfer shares referred to in the documents, as if such holders were the owners of such shares. In other words, there is no evidence that, as a matter of fact, blank transfers, accompanied by certificates of shares registered in the names of transferors, pass from hand to hand like negotiable instruments."

It appears to have been suggested in For v. Martin (3) that France v. Clark (2) had been overruled by Colonial Bank v. Cady (1) but Kekewich, J., was of opinion that that was not the case, and although there may be one or two passages in the judgments of Lord Watson and Lord Herschell which may be said to countenance such a suggestion, I cannot see any inconsistency in the law as laid down in the two cases as appropriate to their respective facts. In both cases the holders of the documents were held to have been put on inquiry and, therefore, there was no estoppel against the true owner. The important point to notice is that the only representation which is made and can be made on the facts of the documents in such cases is by the true owner who signs the transfer as transferor. The various parties through whose hands the documents may pass before they come to the last holder, have made no representations. Sir Thomas was right in saying that the only inquiry that a holder can be put to, by reason of the nature or character of the documents which come into his possession, is with regard to the action of the registered holder. Did he intend to transfer, and had he authority to transfer? He could not possibly be put to inquiry with regard to the rights and liabilities of intermediate holders.

(3) (1885) 61 L. J. Ch. 473.

VADILAL SARABHAI V. MANREKJI PESTONJI.

But it has been contended by the respondents that Mahilal knew that Gora had not paid plaintiff No. 2 for the shares, and, therefore, took the documents with notice of plaintiff No. 2's rights.

That is correct, but all that the plaintiff No. 2 was entitled to as against Gora was to receive the price. He had no title either in law or in equity to the shares, which was the proposition with which I started. The learned Judge thought that the plaintiffs as unpaid vendors had the equity in them, but as between the plaintiffs and Gora it was a matter of contract which could only be regulated by the provisions of the Contract Act. Assuming for the purposes of argument that delivery of the documents constituted the delivery of the goods, once they parted with the documents, they had no right to have them returned. If Gora had stolen the documents the case would be entirely different. But Gora's statement in his evidence that he did not think he was the owner because he had not paid for the shares cannot alter the legal position.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 rightly admit that they are not entitled to hold the shares except for what may be found due to them by Gora on a proper account being taken. As Gora has absconded and has made no attempt to have that account taken nothing can be done unless Gora is adjudicated insolvent.

On the question of costs defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have both filed false written statements. Defendant No. 2 persisted in maintaining what he had said in his written statement until he was forced to admit that Ghia was his nominee.

Ghia did not appear at the hearing, although he instructed Counsel to argue the appeal. The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but having regard to their conduct I think they should pay their own costs throughout.

Crump, J.—I have had the benefit of reading the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in this case. I agree entirely with his conclusions, but as we are reversing the judgment of the learned Trial Judge I desire to state my reasons briefly.

It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts. The position may be summed up shortly as follows.—Plaintiffs sold 129 shares to defendant No. 1. Defendant sold 25 of these to a third party and pledged 104 along with 201 similar shares to defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 put forward defendant No. 3 as a party who was willing to advance money. In fact defendant No. 3 was a mere nominee of defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 got possession of these 305 shares fraudulently. The fraud was that he deceived defendant No. 1 by false pretences that he would use these shares for the purpose of raising a loan for the benefit of defendant No. 1 which he did not do and which he did not intend to do, his real object being to secure himself from loss as regards the moneys due to him by defendant No. 1.

On these facts it is not disputed that plaintiffs are entitled to a decree as against defendant No. 1 for their unpaid purchase-money. They seek, however, to recover the documents and also damages as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The question is whether they can do this.

As regards the position of plaintiffs inter se I agree with what is stated in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice. It appears that plaintiff No. 2 and defendant No. 1 dealt as principals. Plaintiff No. 2 was not the registered holder of these shares.

It is not perhaps strictly accurate to speak of these transactions as sales of shares. Plaintiff No. 2 as vendor agreed to sell and deliver transfers and certificates with the interests and rights which they convey [London Founder's Association v. Clarke (4)]. Such delivery passes not the property in the shares but a title legal and equitable which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares [Per Lord Watson in Colonial Bank v. Cady (1)]. On delivery of the documents there was no interest left in plaintiff No. 2 on which any equity can be founded. As between him and defendant No. 1 there was no fraud or misrepresentation which can vitiate the transaction. Plaintiff No. 2 had thus no lien for his unpaid purchase-money and without such lien he cannot seek to follow the documents. He could not do so were they still in possession of defendant No. 1 and, therefore, the further history of these documents is not material. The same result follows from the Statute law of this country. Whatever be the exact nature of the property sold it must be "moveable property" for the purpose of Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act. The definition in the General Clauses Act. (Act I of 1868) is applicable. The property is not "immoveable" property within that definition; therefore, it is "moveable" property. It follows from section 76 of the Indian Contract Act that this property is "goods." The case therefore, falls within section 121 of the same Act. Plaintiff No. 2 delivered all that he had. He cannot, therefore, rescind the contract on the buyer's failing to pay the price unless it was stipulated by the contract that he should be so entitled. I agree that no special condition to this effect is proved. The statement of defendant No. 1 that he did not regard himself as owner until he had paid the purchase-money cannot alter the legal relations of the parties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Appellate Court's power to interfere in matter not appealed against.

The object of O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil Procedure Code is to enable the Appellate Court, where its decision interferes with or modifies or extends the decision of the lower Court, to give effect to that decision by interfering, if necessary, even with the rights and liabilities of those who were not in fact appealing from that decision of the Trial Court. Unless it is necessary in the interests of justice to give effect to the Appellate Court's decision by interfering in some way or other with the rights of those parties which are not the subject of appeal before the Appellate Court, the Appellate Court has no right whatever to interfere [p. 986, col. 2].

Rule 33 of O. XII, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to a case in which a plaintiff whose claim is decreed in part prefers an appeal with regard to the part not decreed and the defendant files neither an appeal nor a cross-objection. In such a case it is not open to the Court of Appeal to enter into the question whether the plaintiff is entitled or not to any decree at all and to dismiss his suit in toto [p. 986, col. 1].

Second Appeals from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 19th May 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, Buxar, dated the 10th June 1920.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—These two appeals arise out of two suits which were in stituted by the plaintiff for rent against the tenants of certain holdings. They were two suits numbered 1102 and 1107. The questions arising for determination in both these cases are similar. Although the rent claimed and the area of the holdings is different the facts in other respects relating to both these suits are quite similar and the appeals have been heard together. It appears from the first suit of which alone it is necessary to give any details of the facts that there was a holding consisting originally of 962 acres the rent for which was Rs 41-5-6. This holding was presumed to lie within the ambit of Mouza Dumri the proprietor of which is the present plaintiff, the Maharaja of Dumraon. During the Survey and Settlement proceedings the proprietors of a neighbouring village, Sheopur Diara, who included the present plaintiff, contended that a portion of the land which comprised these two holdings was within Sheopur Diara and not within Dumri. After a dispute before the Settlement Authorities it was finally determined that of the 962 acres of the holding in question in the first of these suits 694 acres alone were within village Dumri the balance being within Sheopur Diara. In the Survey khatian the area of this holding was recorded as 694 acres but the old rent of Rs. 41-5-6 was also recorded as the rent of that holding. Similarly with regard to the other holding in the other suit the original rent was Rs. 34-15-6 and that also was recorded as the rent of the diminished holding, in Mouza Dumri. The plaintiff then brought the present suit claiming in the one case Rs. 41-5-6, and in the other Rs. 34-15-6 describing the area of the holdings not as the original area but as 694 acres in the first case and similarly a diminished area in the second case.

The defendants raised various objections in their written statements and amongst other pleas they contended that the plaintiff had instituted the suit after splitting up the holding and that in such circumstances it could not be entertained. By that I take it they meant that it was not permissible to the plaintiff to sue for rent in respect of a portion of the holding only. If he sued at all he must sue for rent for the whole holding. The defendants in a later part of their written statement give certain measurements and point out that according to the proportionate rate Rs 31-5-6 should be the rent of the lands whereof rent is demanded and they contend that the plaintiff was not entitled to get any more. They further entered a plea of payment which, however, they failed to sustain. Similar pleas were also raised in the case of the other suit.

When the matter came before the Munsif he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff in the circumstances which had arisen was entitled only to the smaller rent, that is to say, the rent proportionate to the smaller area which still remained within Mouza Dumri and he arrived at this conclusion upon the finding that there had in fact been a splitting up of these holdings at or about the time of the settlement. He says after stating certain facts: 'It is, therefore, clear that portions of the holdings as they stood just before Survey were cut away in Mouza Sheopur Diara and were formed into separate holding having no connection with the present holdings.' In these circumstances he awarded the plaintiff Rs 31-5-6 in the one case and Rs. 25-1-6 in the other which in the first case was the sum admitted as the proportionate sum by the defendants and in the other case, was a sum which he found to be the proper sum proportionate to the area of the holding.

From that decision the plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge after considering the facts dismissed the appeal, but he went further although the defendants had not appealed from the decision of the Munsif which decreed that they were liable to pay rent at the smaller rate, found that the plaintiff had in fact right to sue for rent in the circumstances which had been disclosed and he dismissed the case. The reason apparently why he arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled ed to sue in the form in which he did sue was that it had been shown that at the time of the suit the plaintiff was in fact the sole proprietor not only of Mouza Dumri but also of Mouza Sheopur Diara. He also found that the holdings had not in fact been split up into two. Therefore, it followed in his view that the plaintiff being the sole proprietor of the whole of the holdings ought to have brought his suit for rent in respect of the whole of each holding and not merely in respect of a part. He, therefore, considered that the suit was bad and he dismissed it.

The only question which we have to determine is whether in the circumstances found he was entitled under O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil Procedure Code to pass a decree in favour of the respondents who had not appealed dismissing the whole of the suit. In my opinion O. XLI, r. 33 has no application to a case like this. The plaintiff succeeded in that suit in part, that is to say, although he claimed a higher rent, he in fact succeeded in obtaining the smaller rent. He obtained a part of that which he claimed and that was the result of certain findings of the Munsif that the holdings had in fact been split up and that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for rent in the one case in respect of a holding of 6.94 acres, and although he had claimed a greater rent than he was entitled to he was certainly entitled to the rent proportionate to that area. The defendants after that decision was given and the decree passed against them were content and remained satisfied with that decree. They made no attempt to appeal and even when the plaintiff appealed they entered no cross-appeal or cross-objection and in my opinion it was not competent to the learned Judge, when the only question before him was whether the plaintiff was entitled to the extra rent which had been refused him, to enter into the question whether or not he was entitled to any rent. This matter was not before the learned Judge and although the wording of O. XLI, r. 33 may be very wide and give a large discretion to the Court it is in my view clearly not meant to apply to a case like the present. The object of that Order is, speaking generally, to enable the Appellate Court where its decision interferes with or modifies or extends the decision of the lower Court to give effect to that decision by interfering, if necessary, even with the rights and liabilities of those who are not in fact appealing from the decision of the Trial Court. Unless it is necessary in the interests of justice to give effect to the Appellate Court's decision by interfering in some way or other with the rights of those parties which are not the subject of appeal before us then it seems to me that the Appellate Court has no right whatever to interfere. The illustration given to that rule is a very good instance of the cases in which a Court may well interfere. Again in the case of Rangam Lal v. Jhandu (1) the very question which arises in the present case had to be considered and it was decided by the Allahabad High Court that the Court in such circumstances had no right to interfere under O. XLI, r. 33. The head-note is this. "The plaintiff sued the defendant for rent and obtained a decree for a portion of his claim. The plaintiff then appealed against the disallowance of the balance of the amount claimed (exactly as here) but the defendants submitted to the decree" (again exactly as here) "and neither filed a cross-appeal nor took objections under O. XLI, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908." Held, that it was not competent to the Appellate Court acting under O. XLI, r. 33 to interfere with the decree obtained by the plaintiff in so far as it had not been challenged by the defendants, and in support of that decision the Court, consisting of the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Bannerji and Mr. Justice Tudball referred to the case of the Attorney-General v. Simpson (2) which points out certain principles which ought to govern the Court in acting under powers conferred by rule 33. In my opinion, that case was perfectly properly decided and it seems to me to govern the present case. Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 9—Mortgage by conditional sale—Suit for foreclosure—Year of grace expiring after passing of Act—Act, whether applicable—Widow of agriculturist—Decree, ex parte, for possession against widow—Interest of reversioners not protected—Reversioners, whether bound.

The Punjab Alienation of Land Act applies to a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale in which the year of grace expires after the passing of the Act. The proceedings in such a suit remain pending until the year of grace has expired and the mortgagor has debarred himself from tendering the mortgage money either to the Court which issued the notice or to the mortgagee himself.

If the widow of an agriculturist refuses to accept a modification of the mortgage-deed executed by her husband before the passing of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, in the terms of the Act, and allows a decree for foreclosure of mortgage by conditional sale to be passed against her ex parte, she does not do all in her power to protect the estate, and the reversioners of her husband, after her death, are not bound by that ex parte decree.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 23rd December 1920.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was transferred by one Rupa in 1895 to the defendant's father by a mortgage containing a stipulation for conditional sale. Rupa on his demise was succeeded by his widow Musammat Goran, and on the 8th June 1900 the mortgagee applied for issue of notice of foreclosure to Musammat Goran. That notice was served on the 16th June 1900, but a few days before the year of grace expired, the Punjab Land Alienation Act came into force on the 8th June 1901. In July 1904 the mortgagee recognising that Land Alienation Act applied to his mortgage made a prayer to the Deputy Commissioner under section 9 of the Land Alienation Act for possession of the land as mortgagee, but Musammat Goran refused to admit the validity of the mortgage and the Deputy Commissioner declined to interfere and referred the mortgagee to the Civil Court; thereupon the mortgagee in 1904 instituted a suit for possession as full owner on the ground that the year of grace had expired and the mortgage had ripened into a sale. The quondam mortgagee obtained an ex parte decree and took possession in April 1905. The present suit has been brought by the reversioners of the mortgagor on the death of Musammat Goran to redeem the land. Originally they prayed also to avoid the mortgage but that prayer was subsequently withdrawn. The First Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had not established their relationship with the mortgagor. The learned District Judge held the relationship established but found that the foreclosure proceedings instituted in 1900 by the mortgagee were not in order and that the reversioners are not bound by the ex parte decree for possession passed in 1904 against Musammat Goran, and he accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the Trial Court in order that the Deputy Commissioner might be moved to take action under section 9 (3) of the Land Alienation Act.

In second appeal it is contended first that the Land Alienation Act does not apply to this case inasmuch as the service of notice of foreclosure had been made upon Musammat Goran before the Act came into operation. This contention, however, we are unable to accept because we must hold that the proceedings for the enforcement of foreclosure of mortgage comprising a stipulation of conditional sale remain pending until the year of grace has expired and the mortgagor has debarred himself from tendering the mortgage money either to the Court which issued the notice or to the mortgagee himself. The point, however, appears to be of little importance for the mortgagee recognised in 1904 that the Punjab Land Alienation Act applied to his mortgage and he consequently moved the Deputy Commissioner to take action under that Act. The Deputy Commissioner, however, refused to take any action and again failed to take action by way of revision, when the fact that the mortgagee had been given a decree for possession as full owner was brought to his notice in execution proceedings.

There remains the further point whether those proceedings are binding on the reversioners and we answer the question in the negative for there is some evidence that Musammam Goran was under the influence of the mortgagee. There is, moreover, clear evidence that she refused to accept a modification of the mortgage-deed in the terms of the Punjab Land Alienation Act a modification which would have satisfied the mortgagee and would, at the same time, have protected the reversionary rights of the reversioners.

The only question remaining is whether the matter should now be referred to the Deputy Commissioner; but as already pointed out, he has already refused to intervene. Nor, since the plaintiffs' prayer is to redeem, is there any necessity for the cancellation of the clause of conditional sale. The suit was brought within a few years of the death of Musammam Goran when succession opened out to the plaintiffs and they are entitled to ignore the foreclosure proceedings, which would be binding on Musammam Goran on the ground that Musammam Goran did not defend their interests and do all in her power to protect the estate.

We accordingly accept the appeal and modify the order of the Court below by cancelling the direction for a reference to the Collector and substituting the direction that the Trial Court shall determine the sum to be paid by the plaintiffs for the redemption of the mortgage. Costs shall follow the final event.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), s. 26 (a), 74—S. 74, whether retrospective—Function of s. 26 (a)—Validation of agreements.

Section 74 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act has no retrospective effect inasmuch as it affects the substantive rights of parties [p. 989, col. 2].

Section 26 (a) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was not contemplated to invalidate agreements which were valid in their inception but to validate agreements in special cases out of such agreements as would otherwise have been invalid owing to the provision of section 21 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1879, [p. 990, col. 1].

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Manbhum, dated the 17th May 1921, confirming that of the Deputy Collector, Dhanbad, dated the 9th February 1921.

Mr. A. B. Mukherji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for realization of rent by the plaintiff landlord against the defendant-appellant for the years 1323 to 1325 and three quarters of 1326. The First Court disallowed the claim for rent for 1323 and passed a decree for rent for the remaining period. This decree has been affirmed by the Appellate Court.

The case of the plaintiff is that the father of the defendant Ramdhan Majhi executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff agreeing to an annual rental of Rs. 75 and 32½ seers of paddy worth Rs. 1-10-9 and also to pay road-cess at Rs. 2-5-6.

The case for the defence is that the tenancy in question was acquired by Ramdhan Majhi father of the defendant and one Mohit Majhi father of Jhalu Majhi in 1892 (1298 to 1299 B. S.) when they obtained the land in two instalments by two documents, namely, a registered sale-deed (Exhibit D) and a registered mokarrari patta (Exhibit E); that since then Ramdhan and Mohit jointly cultivated the holding and paid rent to the ijaradar Gangu Majhi and after their death their sons Bhola (the defendant) and Jhalu as well as their cousins Kartik and Tiku are cultivating the lands. As regards the kabuliyat (Exhibit 1), executed by the father of the defendant, the defendant denies all knowledge of it and contends that even if executed it was never operative. The plaintiff was unable to produce before the Court the original registered kabuliyat executed by Ramdhan Majhi. He alleged that the original had been lost and the question arose whether secondary evidence of the kabuliyat could be admitted. The Court of first instance as well as the Court of Appeal after going into the evidence came to the conclusion that the kabuliyat had been in the record-room of the plaintiff up to 1911 when it was taken out and filed in a criminal case in the Dhanbad Court and that owing to the negligence of the clerks concerned the document was never taken back from the Court and returned to the record-room. The execution of the kabuliyat was proved by the writer of it, Jagabandhu Sarcar. It appears that the kabuliyat was also proved by means of an admission by Ramdhan himself made in his deposition in a Civil suit in the Munsif's Court in 1910, this deposition is Exhibit 7 in this case. On these grounds both the Courts found as a fact that Ramdhan the father of the defendant did execute the kabuliyat as alleged and admitted the secondary evidence offered for proving it.

On the question as to whether Mohit had anything to do with the tenancy in question both the Courts have come to a finding that neither Mohit nor Mohit's descendants had anything to do with it and that they were not necessary parties to the suit. Moreover, according to their case they had taken the holdings from the ijaradar Gangu Majhi. The Courts have held that there is no evidence that Mohit was ever recognized by the present plaintiff, who is the zemindar, as tenant; that all along since the kabuliyat the plaintiff had been dealing with Ramdhan and his son the defendant in respect of the tenancy in suit and that the defendant himself had been describing the lands as "his" lands and depositing the rent in his own name.

This appeal seems to be concluded by these findings of fact but the learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the Court below erred in not considering the effect of section 74 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act on the decision of this case. Section 74 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act apparently cannot possibly have retrospective effect inasmuch as it affects the substantive rights of parties. The kabuliyat in this case was executed before the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act came into force. Therefore, all agreements entered into prior to the date, when the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act came into operation would obviously be beyond the scope of section 74. The kabuliyat in question was executed in 1905. The objection, therefore, that is now urged that in view of the provisions of section 74 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the kabuliyat would be void and of no effect, has no force whatsoever. Moreover, on the findings of the Courts below this case does not come within the scope of section 74, inasmuch as the section contemplates the case of a lease executed "with a view to the continuance of such occupation"; whereas in the present case there is no question of continuance, the previous tenancy having been under the ijaradar which was not subsequently recognized by the landlord and, therefore, the lease must be regarded as marking the very inception of the tenancy.

It is next urged that in view of the provisions of section 26 (a) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act: the kabulyat in question does not satisfy the requirement of law and hence must be deemed to be inoperative. Now it has been held that section 26 of Act VI. of 1908 was not contemplated to invalidate agreements which were valid in their inception, as in the present case, but to validate agreements in special cases out of such agreements as would otherwise have been invalid owing to the provisions of section 21 of the Chota Nagpur Landlord and Tenancy Procedure Act (I of 1879). The observations of Mookerjee, J. in the case of Gaju Mahto v. G. P. Cooke (1) are in support of this view. The contentions of law urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant are, therefore, without any substance.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX. of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupati, in Small Cause Suit No. 136 of 1921.

Mr. A. C. Sompath Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the decree of the District Munsif of Tirupati in Small Cause Suit No. 136 of 1921. The District Munsif dismissed the suit mainly on the ground that no jodi is claimable from the tenants. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that the question whether the defendants are liable to pay jodi is res judicata by reason of two previous decisions, one in Original Suit No. 79 of 1904; Exhibit C and the other in Original Suit No. 439 of 1908, Exhibit G. In Exhibit G the question was specifically raised in issue I whether no jodi at all is payable. An additional issue was raised whether the defendants therein were not barred by res judicata from raising the plea that they were not liable to pay jodi to the plaintiff. The District Munsif held that the decision in the Original Suit No. 79 of 1904 was res judicata between the parties. It is now urged on the respondents' side that the defendants were ex parte and, therefore, the judgment is not binding on the ex parte defendants. The defendants placed reliance upon the decision of Modhusudan Shaha Mondul v. Brae (1) in which it was held that in a rent suit, if the defendants are ex parte the decision could not be res judicata in subsequent suits. When a question is specifically raised and decided, a decision on the question is res judicata between the parties in subsequent cases. The case in Modhusudan Shaha Mondul v. Brae (1) was considered and distinguished in two cases of the Calcutta High Court reported as Raj Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Alimuddi (2) and Hara

PROKASH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA v. SHAMA CHARAN, DUTT.

Chahdra Bairagi v. Bepn Behary Das (3). In Shyama Charan Banerji v. Mrinmayi Debi (4) it was held that an ex parte decision could be res judicata between the parties in subsequent suit. The real question is whether a certain contention was raised or a contention should have been raised or could have been raised or not. If a contention which could have been raised was not raised by the defendants, that would not take away the force of the judgment which decided the point against the defendants. In that view I think the decision in No. 439 of 1908, Exhibit G is res judicata between the parties. It is argued by Mr. Ramdoss who appears for two of the respondents that Exhibit I which is a deed of gift by the land-holder, exempts the defendants from paying jodi, and he contends that only the question of landlord and tenant is res judicata between the parties. No doubt in the case of rent suits the decision as regards the rent for one year would be res judicata as regards the rate of rent for any of the following years. Exhibit I merely refers to the liability of the defendant to pay jodi. The contention that the defendants were not liable to pay jodi should have been put forward in the suits of 1904 and 1908, and that contention not having been put forward in these suits, it is not open now to the defendants to put forward the contention. I find this point in favour of the petitioner.

As regards the next point which relates to road-cess, Mr. Ramdoss very candidly concedes that the defendants are liable to pay road-cess. I allow this petition with costs and the plaintiff will have a decree for the suit amount with costs of the lower Court. Petitioner's Vakil admits that defendants No. 8 and 9 have paid road-cess. So far as that amount is concerned they will be exonerated.

Where there are two devolutions—the death of a party, and the transfer by him of his interest in the suit—the transferee has the right to be brought on the record in place of the deceased transferor. Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Jessore, dated the 21st of March 1922

Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babus Satya Charan Sinha and Bon Behari Sarkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 21st March 1922, setting aside his previous order of the 7th November 1921, and rejecting the appellant's application for substitution in place of the plaintiff in the suit. The facts are that, one Giridhari Lal Sarowgi brought the present suit on the allegation that the mortgage executed by defendant No. 2 in favour of defendant No. 1 was collusive, fraudulent and benami and could not affect the plaintiff's mortgage. He further prayed that it might be declared that the mortgage decree obtained by defendant No. 1 on the said mortgage against defendant No. 2 and him (plaintiff) was fraudulent and collusive and inoperative against him (plaintiff). In the said suit brought by defendant No. 1 he claimed to be the first mortgagee while Giridhari Lal was described as a puisne mortgagee. During the pendency of this suit on the 16th June 1921, Giridhari Lal sold his interest in the mortgage and in other properties to the present plaintiff. On the 4th

PROKASH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA V. SHAMA CHARAN DUTT.

October 1921 Giridhari died, on the 7th November 1921 the appellant filed an application under O. XXII, r. 10 for substitution in place of Giridhari Lal on the allegation that he had purchased his interest in the mortgage the subject-matter of the suit. It was not disallowed on that date that Giridhari was dead. On the other hand, the Pleader for Giridhari Lal in the suit consented to the appellant being substituted in place of his client and the petition was granted by the Court. Subsequently, the defendants made an application that on the 7th November 1921—the date on which the plaintiff applied for substitution—Giridhari was dead and, therefore, the order substituting the plaintiff in place of Giridhari passed under O. XXII, r. 10, should be set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge has given effect to this contention. He has held that where two devolutions take place, namely, where there has been an assignment by a party to the suit and before the assignee has been brought on the record the party dies the substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased party ought to be made. He formulates this view on the language of O. XXII, r. 3. Under that rule, according to the Judge, if the right to sue survives, as it does in the present case, the Court can only bring on the record the legal representatives of the plaintiff. The Court is, therefore, entitled to bring on the record only the legal representatives of the plaintiff; and, if there is an assignee of the plaintiff, he shall not be substituted in place of the deceased plaintiff. The provision of the law as contained in O. XXII, r. 3 should be given effect to whenever the contingency thus contemplated happens; and the assignee of the plaintiff should not be entitled to come in in preference to the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. In this view of the law the learned Judge has vacated his order passed on the 7th November 1922 and dismissed the plaintiff's application for substitution; and as within the time prescribed by law no application was made by the legal representatives of Giridhari Lal to cause substitution he ordered that the suit should abate. In our judgment the view taken by the lower Court is erroneous. It is not necessary to enter into the question whether the consent given by the Pleader on the 7th November 1921 was given in ignorance of the fact of Giridhari's death or whether the appellant was aware that Giridhari was dead at the time a fact which he denies. The simple question of law that arises in this case irrespective of those facts, is whether when there are two devolutions—the death of a party and the transfer by him of his interest in the suit—the transferee has the right to be brought on the record in place of the deceased transferor. It seems to us on going through the several sections of the Code, dealing with this matter, that the two devolutions which have occurred in this case are distinct and are governed by different considerations. The death of the plaintiff after the assignment of his interest should not take away the assignee's right to be substituted in the suit. If effect is given to the contrary contention the result will be that if a plaintiff after selling his interest in the subject-matter of the suit dies, before the assignee could make an application for substitution under O. XXII, r. 10, the assignee will have no right to be brought on the record and the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff having no interest in the subject-matter there will be no representation in the suit, and the assignee will be deprived of the benefit of his purchase through no fault of his. The true view is what was taken in the case of Rajaram Bhagwat v. Jibai (1). West, J., has lucidly dealt with this point in the following passage: "The case being one of an assignment or creation of an interest pending the appeal plus the death of the assignor, is one embracing a fact more than that contemplated by section 368". (O. XXII, r. 4, the case there being one of death of a respondent). "The rule in section

NARASINGHERJI GYANAGERJI v. PANUGANTI PARTHASARADHI.

372 (O. XXII, r. 10) on the other hand must be admitted to apply to it, and being alone sufficiently inclusive, if not the more specific, as dealing with 'other cases' than the ones previously provided for, must prevail over those rules. The double event of a transfer of the decree-holder's title and of his death was probably not distinctly conceived by the draftsman of the Code, but we can give effect to the apparent intention, not only in a literal application of the words to the cases exactly provided for but also by a logical extension of them to the composite cases involving circumstances that fall separately under distinct rules, and yet must have been meant to be dealt with in a consistent and uniform manner." We think that this is the correct view of the law. We must, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below dated the 21st March 1922. But the learned Judge has not inquired into the bona fides of the transfer to the plaintiff-appellant and as the respondent wishes that the case should be sent back for an enquiry we think that this appeal should be sent back. In the case of Lakshan Chunder Dey v. Nikunji Moni Dassi (2) it was held that an applicant who invokes the aid of O. XXII, r. 10 is not entitled for a matter of right to an order in his favour. This case will go back to the learned Subordinate Judge for a proper order of the appellant's application filed on the 7th November 1921—the order passed by that Court on that date as also the order of the 21st March 1922 being disallowed. As the case has taken a very long time we express a hope that the Court below will see to the expeditious termination of the suit.

Each party will bear his costs of this appeal.

Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Construction of document—Sale or mortgage—Surrounding circumstances

In construing a document, surrounding circumstances may be taken into consideration in order to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts. [p. 997, col. 2]

In August, 1908, A, a judgment-debtor, in order to prevent a Court sale of his property, consisting of several villages, executed a document by which he purported to sell the property absolutely to B, with a condition of reconveyance. A, however, reserved his rights to the muncials in the land. The rents were to be enjoyed by B, from the date of purchase. The price paid was absurdly small, and the property would have fetched a larger sum even at public auction. Under a separate document, expressed to be entered into for reconveyance of the property, B agreed to sell and A to purchase the villages for the amount paid for them on 31st August 1912, 31st August 1913, or 31st August 1914, and not earlier. In case A paid the sum to B, and a conveyance in due form was executed, he was to become entitled to the rents of the villages as from the date of payment. If before the deed of conveyance was executed, any portion of the land was acquired by Government, the compensation awarded was to be deemed equivalent to 20 years' rent of the land acquired, and both A and B were to be entitled each to his proportionate share, the share of money due to A being, if needed, given credit for towards the sale price.

Held, that the transaction though ostensibly a sale with a right of repurchase in the vendor was in reality merely a mortgage by conditional sale. [p. 997, col. 2]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 24th of February 1921, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nellore, dated the 5th of October 1918, and made in the Original Suit No. 1 of 1917.

Issues raised by the appellant, necessitated in the Courts below, and particularly in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, whose judgment their Lordships would at once observe is conspicuous for its ability, care and completeness, a prolonged investigation and examination of conflicting evidence. Concurrent findings against the appellant on every issue of fact raised by him have, however, greatly narrowed the ambit of the dispute as presented to the Board, and no more than two questions—difficult and important questions it is true—have survived for discussion before their Lordships.

Of these one only has so far been argued. But it raises the fundamental dispute between the parties, which may be described as an issue as to the true nature of the transaction of the 4th of August 1908, between the appellant and the late Rajah of Malahasti (now represented by the respondents his assignees) as a result of which the properties in suit passed to the appellant. The transaction is evidenced by two documents referred to throughout the proceedings as Exhibits X and U. Did it effect as contended for by the respondents merely a mortgage by conditional sale of the properties in suit, or was it as contended by the appellant, an absolute sale of these properties to himself, with an agreement on his part to reconvey on the strict performance by the Rajah of certain defined conditions?

In this suit the respondents, who as already indicated had succeed as auction-purchasers to the outstanding rights in the properties of the Rajah, claimed to redeem them on the footing that the transaction in question was a mortgage. Alternatively, they claimed to have the properties reconveyed to them upon payment of the purchase price on the ground that if, contrary to their main contention, the transaction did amount to an out and out sale, the conditions entitling the Rajah to a reconveyance had been all complied with by him, and in his shoes they now stood.

In the Trial Court, the respondents succeeded on their main case. In the Court of Appeal they succeeded on their alternative case. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the transaction amounted to a mortgage by conditional sale. The High Court on appeal felt themselves constrained upon the authorities to hold that, in view of the terms of Exhibits X and U, the transaction must be held to have been an absolute sale of the properties to the appellant. But they found also, agreeing in this with the learned Subordinate Judge, that the conditions entitling the Rajah to a reconveyance on that footing had been performed, and that the respondents, as his successors-in-interest, were entitled to have the properties assured to them on payment of the prescribed price.

From that order of the High Court the present appeal is brought. Mr Clauson for the appellant did not ask their Lordships to review the conclusion of the High Court that all the conditions entitling the Rajah to a reconveyance had been performed. That conclusion—strenuously contested in the Courts below—now rested on concurrent findings of fact which he could not before the Board seek to displace. The appellant's sole ground of appeal, indeed, was that the right to a reconveyance reserved by Exhibit U was personal to the Rajah and did not pass to any assignee. As, however, the appellant's views on this matter raised very difficult questions of law, and as Counsel recognised that no success with them would avail him anything if the respondents were to establish, before the Board as they had done before the Subordinate Judge, that the transaction with the appellant did in truth amount to a mortgage, Mr Clauson with the approval of the Board, confined his argument to that question on the understanding that, if their Lordships ultimately accepted upon it the view in his favour taken by the High Court, the substantive issue raised by the appellant in his appeal would become the subject of subsequent discussion before the Board.

In accordance with that arrangement the vital question whether the transaction in question did or did not amount to a mortgage has been fully argued before their Lordships and with that problem alone they now propose to deal.

It seems to their Lordships that they can dispose of the present case with no reference to any oral evidence, other than that of surrounding circumstances such as in Lord Davey's words in Balkushen Das v. W. F. Legge (1) are clearly required to show in what manner the language of the documents was related to existing facts.

To a consideration of these circumstances their Lordships now proceed.

The Rajah of Kalahasti—party to the transaction in question—succeeded in 1905 to the Taluk of Pamur. The taluk consisted of 223 villages, and at the succession of the Rajah, it was in a state of the utmost embarrassment.

It had been for some time in the hands of the Court of Wards but earlier in the same year that Court had handed it back to the Rajah's nephew and predecessor. The property was heavily encumbered. It was subject to a mortgage of the 20th of June 1893 in favour of Rajah Venugopal, who in 1899 had obtained a mortgage decree in respect of his debt amounting then to about 6 lakhs. In March, 1908, in pursuance of his decree, he had proceeded to a Court sale of 27 villages part of the taluk, and had realised thereby a sum of about 3½ lakhs, but that price was being challenged by the Rajah for inadequacy, and inadequate it seems to have been. Nor was the decree-holder content with his partial realization, and his purpose was to bring the remaining 196 villages to sale for the balance of his debt which, with interest, then amounted to nearly 6 lakhs, and he had actually obtained an order fixing that sale for the 8th of August 1908.

Such was the position when the transaction now in question was entered into. It was carried out four days earlier on the 4th of August 1908. Six lakhs were required by the Rajah to avert a Court sale. The appellant, a rich money-lender of Allahabad, provided that sum. It was provided after very slight, if any, inquiry. The transaction, whatever it was properly called, was not the result either of any bargaining as to the value of the property conveyed or as to the price to be paid. The six lakhs were required and they were found. That was all.

That sum had no relation to the value of the 196 villages comprised in the deed of assurance. On this matter the Board are in full agreement with both Courts below. As the learned Chief Justice points out, the 27 villages had in the previous March fetched as much as Rs. 3,46,000 and that price was being challenged for inadequacy. There was no evidence and no reason to suppose that the 27 villages differed materially from the 196 villages still remaining unsold, still less that they differed to such an extent as to make the value of these 27 villages equal to two-thirds of the value of the 196. The evidence as to the gross income of the 196 villages led to the same conclusion. It was the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that the value of these 196 villages amounted in 1908 to 15 or 16 lakhs at the least. The learned Chief Justice had no hesitation in concurring so far in that view as to hold that in August, 1908, 6 lakhs would have been a most grossly inadequate price and much less than could have been realised by private sale or even by a Court sale. Their Lordships have examined the evidence on this subject for themselves and they are in entire agreement with the learned Chief Justice as to its result. And that is sufficient. They desire to add, however, that had it been necessary they would have been prepared to endorse in its entirety the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point.

NARASINGHJI GAYANAGHRIJI V. PANUGANTI PARTHASARADHI.

Thus informed of the circumstances surrounding the execution of X and U, their Lordships are now in a position to examine these documents so as to ascertain from their provisions and necessary implications the real nature of the transaction to which they gave effect.

Exhibit X, described as an indenture made by way of conveyance—their Lordships will refer to it as the conveyance—describes the Rajah as vendor and the appellant as purchaser. It begins with a recital of the title of the Rajah to the 196 villages in question, it goes on to recite the mortgage of June, 1893; the decree for sale and the sale of the 27 villages; and the fact that the remaining villages are proclaimed for sale on the 8th of August then current. The final recital is as follows:—

"And whereas the vendor has, in order to prevent the property being sold in public auction and realising much less than what they are actually worth, agreed to convey by private sale the said villages to the said purchaser for Rs. 6,00,000."

Their Lordships will return to this recital in due course. The conveyance then witnesses that in consideration of Rs. 5,60,445 paid to the decree-holder in satisfaction of his debt and Rs. 39,554-7 paid to the vendor, the vendor as beneficial owner grants and conveys the properties, "subject to the conditions and reservations mentioned below," to the purchaser, "his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns in fee simple absolutely." Then follow covenants for right to convey, quiet enjoyment, and further assurance and for indemnifying the purchaser, etc.

"Against all losses, damages, expenses, claims and liabilities whatsoever if any which he or they may pay, sustain, incur, or be put to by reason or in respect of the purchase thereof."

The principal conditions and reservations are:—

1. All rents are to belong to and be enjoyed by the purchaser as from 1st July 1908.
2. The vendor reserves to himself the sole right to the minerals and mineral rights including marble in villages and the right.

"To re-purchase the said villages as per the agreement of this day's date executed by the purchaser to the vendor, the said right to be exercised only on or after the 31st August 1912, and on or before the 31st August 1914, and to be in strict accordance with the terms set forth in the document above referred to."

In Exhibit U, the agreement just referred to, the appellant appears as vendor and the Rajah as purchaser. It is expressed to be made for the reconveyance of the 196 villages specified in the schedule attached to the conveyance, and clause 1 provides that "The vendor agrees to sell and the purchaser to purchase the villages mentioned in the conveyance for Rs. 6,00,000, the said sum to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor on the 31st August 1912, the 31st August 1913, or the 31st August 1914, and not earlier."

By clause 2 the vendor is to execute a deed of sale in favour of the purchaser as soon thereafter as the said sum of Rs. 6,00,000 is paid to the vendor, and the vendor is to be entitled solely to the possession and enjoyment of the village till such sum is paid and a conveyance in due form executed.

By clause 3 it is provided that if the purchaser fails to pay the amount mentioned in clause 2 before the 31st August 1914, as above-mentioned, the purchaser shall lose all his right of re-purchase and that agreement shall then cease to be operative and void. In case the purchaser pays to the vendor the said sum of Rs. 6,00,000 on the 31st August 1912, 1913 or 1914, as above set forth, and a conveyance in due form is executed, the purchaser is to become entitled to all the rents and profits derivable from the villages as from the 1st day of July 1912, 1913 or 1914 respectively.

Clause 4 is very important. Its terms are these:—

"If after the date of this agreement and before the sale-deed is executed, the Government take up any portion of the land hereunder agreed to be conveyed under the Land Acquisition Act and award compensation therefor, any compensation so awarded shall, unless Government otherwise expressly provides, be deemed to be equivalent to 20 years' rent of the land acquired, and the vendor and the purchaser shall be entitled each to his proportionate share of the purchase money. The share of the money due to the purchaser being, if need be, given credit for towards the sale price of Rs 6,00,000 already mentioned and agreed upon."

Their Lordships do not conceal from themselves the fact that the transaction as phrased in these documents is ostensibly a sale, with a right of re-purchase in the vendor. This appearance, indeed, is laboriously maintained. The words of conveyance needlessly iterate the description of an absolute interest, and the rights of re-purchase bear the appearance of rights in relation to the exercise of which time is of the essence.

But a closer examination of the documents discloses their real character. Take for example the final recital of the conveyance to which reference has already been made. What is its true implication? A consideration of the facts known to both parties makes it, their Lordships think, reasonably plain. The parties knew two things quite well. First, that 6 lakhs was an absurd purchase price. Secondly, that even at public auction the properties could be expected to realise a larger sum than that. What then was the implication? Surely that the transaction in which they were engaging was not a sale but a loan. For notice how that principle is worked out. The Rajah has not only an option to re-purchase. He is put under an obligation to buy if the appellant thinks fit to require him so to do. The appellant's 6 lakhs can be recovered by him if he chooses to sue upon the Rajah's contract to re-purchase, he remaining in possession and enjoyment of the rents and profits of the properties until that price is paid.

Again, is time of the essence of the exercise by the Rajah of his rights in this matter? Clause 4 of the agreement already set forth indicates to their Lordships that it is not. That clause seems also to be clear enough although it describes an arrangement very unusual in character. The clause is providing for the possibility of the appellant being compulsorily expropriated by Government from some part of the property in suit, and the receipt by him of the compensation in respect thereof. The compensation is to be treated as the equivalent of 20 years' rent, it is to be treated as belonging to the appellant and the Rajah according to what would have been their rights inter se to possession of the expropriated lands during these years; the money is to be received by the appellant as being in possession, but, if need be—these are the critical words—credit is to be given to the Rajah for his share by a deduction from the 6 lakhs otherwise payable by him on re-purchase.

These words show that in certain circumstances such credit will not be his. But what must these circumstances be. There can only be a re-purchase more than 20 years after the expropriation. But if time was of the essence for such re-purchase it could in no circumstances be postponed beyond six years from the date of the conveyance. Clearly, therefore, and within the intendment of the documents themselves, time is not of the essence in this matter, and so soon as that is established all pretence for holding this ostensible sale and re-purchase to be anything else than a mortgage by conditional sale disappears, and its establishment reinforces several other considerations leading to the same conclusion such as the reservation of the right in the conveyance itself; the reservation of minerals which is directed, in their Lordships' view, to a restriction on the appellant's usufructuary privileges; the strange covenant of indemnity and the inconsistent and almost unintelligible provisions as to the actual time limited for the exercise of the Rajah's so-called right of re-purchase. When all these provisions of the documents are viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, the inference is, in their Lordships' view, irresistible that here a mortgage and a mortgage only was in the direct contemplation and intention of both parties to the transaction.

KARACHI BANK V. KODUMAL KALUMAL.

Such was the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge. Such was apparently the belief of the learned Judges of the High Court, but they felt themselves precluded from giving effect to that belief by their hesitation to attribute, what their Lordships hold to be, their real result, to the considerations emerging from the terms of the documents to which attention has here been drawn.

In these circumstances their Lordships find it unnecessary to deal with the numerous authorities upon this subject which they have examined. The case in their view is abundantly clear. They would only observe, before parting with it, that, as at present advised, they must not be taken to subscribe to the view that there has been introduced into the law of India such a radical change in the laws of evidence as is suggested by the learned Chief Justice, a change which would have the effect of excluding from the class of mortgages by conditional sale many transactions which before the Evidence Act would have been held to be within that class.

The present case with the shifts and devices, to which the appellant resorted to deprave the respondents of all their rights in the property, if the character of a mortgage could not be attached to the transaction, show how serious such a conclusion would be.

Without most careful consideration their Lordships would hesitate to accept a view which would bear so hardly on many mortgagors expressing their contracts of borrowing in long accepted Indian forms.

The respondents in their Lordships' judgment are entitled to a redemption decree. They are chargeable with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st of September 1914, down to the date when the six lakhs were paid into Court. The appellant will be entitled to the interest earned by that sum since it was so paid in.

On the other hand, the appellant must account to the respondents for mesne profits of the properties as from the 1st of July, 1914, until actual delivery of possession to the respondents. The order of the High Court should be discharged and with these variations the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should, in their Lordships' opinion be restored.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The appellant must pay all the costs of the respondents in the High Court and their costs of this appeal.

Mr. E. Castilleno, for the Appellants.

Mr. Srikrishendas H. Lulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There are two points that have been taken up in this appeal (1) that the endorsements on the two War Bonds in suit in favour of C. S. Advani are not forgeries, at any rate were not forged by him and (2) that C. S. Advani by virtue of his possession of these two War Bonds as a share and Stock broker could convey to the appellant—Bank a title to them which would prevail against that of the respondents.

With regard to the first point, we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the endorsements on both the Bonds, in suit which are as follows—

"Pay C. S. Advani or order

are forgeries and we think there can be no reasonable doubt that both these endorsements were forged by C. S. Advani he being the person that pledged them with the appellant Bank—Respondents had advanced Advani a sum of Rs. 2,500 for the purchase of War Bonds on their behalf. The purchase was negotiated through the Bombay Bank and three War Bonds were purchased, two for Rs. 1,000 each and one for Rs. 500. All the three War Bonds were payable to order and were endorsed by the Bombay Bank (now the Imperial Bank) in favour of the respondents Kodumal Kalumal. As it was C. S. Advani that had paid the sum of Rs. 2,500 in the Bombay Bank for the purchase of these War Bonds, he received them from the Bombay Bank on or about 23rd of October 1918, some time having elapsed since the deposit as apparently War Bonds were not available and had to be supplied from Bombay. It appears that on the very day Advani received these War Bonds from the Bombay Bank, he pledged two of Rs. 1,000 each along with some other Bonds with the Karachi Bank in consideration of a loan to himself of the sum of Rs. 9,000 and the Bond of Rs. 500 which it may be observed did not bear on it the forged endorsement as on the two Bonds of Rs. 1,000 each, Advani pledged with the Punjab Bank.

The appellant Bank contends that the respondents authorised Advani to pledge these Bonds. But this appears to us an argument without any substance in it for the respondents have successfully established by their account books and other documentary evidence that they were not in need of any loan. It was argued that the endorsement "pay to C. S. Advani" over the signature purporting to be that of the respondents was written by their Manager, Parsram. Specimens of his signature with two other local Banks were shown to us and on examination they appear to us very dissimilar to the signature on the Bonds. And further if the Manager, Parsram, endorsed the two Bonds of Rs. 1,000 each why did he not make a similar endorsement on the Bond of Rs. 500 which was pledged with the Punjab Bank. To this question we received no reply from the appellants' Pleader. Advani has undoubtedly absconded and there is no trace of him for considerable time. There is positive evidence on the record which clearly goes to prove that the endorsements on the two Bonds were forgeries and in view of all the circumstances of the case we cannot but conclude that both the endorsements were forged by C. S. Advani.

The more important question for consideration and which has been argued by the appellants' Pleader at considerable length is the second. It was first contended that even on the assumption that the endorsements on the Bonds had been forged yet as the initial possession of them by Advani was honest and lawful, he being entrusted with them in his capacity as a Share and Stock broker and the forgery was committed only subsequently, the proviso to section 178 of the Indian Contract Act is not applicable and the appellants' title to the War Bonds should, therefore, prevail as against the respondents. In support of this contention, considerable reliance was placed on the case of R. D. Sethna v. The National

KARACHI BANK V. KODUMAL KALUMAL.

Bank of India (1) where the head-note is as follows —

"For a transaction to fall within the proviso to section 178 it must be established that the fraud or offence was committed by the pawnor against the lawful owner and that the pawnor obtained the goods or documents pledged by means of an offence or fraud perpetrated by him against the lawful owner."

The judgment in this case must be read before the head-note can be appreciated and when read it will soon be found to have no application to the present case. For in the case referred to one Chunilal Pitamber as the sole surviving executor under the Will of his testator was the lawful owner of the shares (which he afterwards transferred to himself fraudulently) and was a person in lawful possession thereof as contemplated by the proviso to section 178. It was held that his possession of the shares was not mere custody but he was in juridical possession thereof inasmuch as the High Court by the grant of Probate clothed the executor with power and authority to deal with and dispose of all the property belonging to the testator's estate. And it was further remarked "Under the proviso to section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, before the Bank's claim to hold the shares as security for their loans is defeated, it must be established that the shares had been obtained by Chunilal the pawnor from their lawful owner or custodian, Chunilal, the executor by means of an offence or fraud." And it was on that ground that it was held that no offence had been committed by Chunilal the pawnor as against Chunilal the executor. This case is no authority for the proposition put before us that it is necessary before the proviso to section 178 can be made applicable that the goods or document should be obtained dishonestly in the first instance, and that a subsequent misappropriation of them or any offence connected with them after they had been lawfully acquired cannot prevent the possessor from making a valid pledge of them. It must be remembered that after the War Bonds came into the possession of Advani, he created a right to them in his favour by forging the endorsements and after doing so pledged them. It appears to us that the proviso to section 178 would be clearly applicable to a case of this description.

But further it should not be overlooked that to create a valid pledge the pledger must be in juridical possession of the goods as distinguished from a bare custody. No doubt O. S. Advani at the time when the sum of Rs. 2,500 was paid to him for the purpose of War Bonds may have been asked to negotiate the purchase as a Share and Stock broker, but when he received these Bonds from the Bombay Bank endorsed by the Bank in favour of Kodumal Kalumal, he received them for a specific purpose and not as a mercantile agent for sale. He was the channel for the purpose of delivering the Bonds to the person rightly entitled to them. It was not juridical possession of the War Bonds, therefore, that he had but he was the custodian of them in order that he may hand them over to Kodumal Kalumal.

The question as to the nature of the possession required under section 178 of the Indian Contract Act has been dealt with by this Bench in the case of Ramkrishendas v. Jasumal (2) and there is nothing that we can usefully add to it.

Much argument was addressed to us based on section 58 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and it was argued that even if the endorsements were forged, the appellant Bank were holders in due course as they took the War Bonds in good faith and for value. But no person can claim title to any negotiable instrument through a forged endorsement except in cases mentioned in section 85 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Such an instrument is a nullity and must be taken as if no such endorsement was on the instrument. Cf. Banku Bchari Sikdar v. Secretary of State for India (3). In Jai Narain v. Mahbub Bakhsh (4) the plaintiff had employed a broker for the sale of certain hundis and the defendant became the purchaser of those hundies through endorsements forged by the broker. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in a suit for money although the defendants were purchasers in good faith because a forged endorsement created no title at all. To the same effect is the decision in Hunsraj Purmanand v. Rattan Walji (5). Section 58 of the Negotiable Instruments Act appears to us to deal with cases of defective title. But the possession of the person with a defective title is different from that of the person that has no title at all. As said in Chalmers' Negotiable Instruments Act the endorsements through which the holder in due course can claim must be genuine. In the present case Advani had no title whatever to the War Bonds by reason of the forgery. No doubt we have no reason to question the good faith of the appellant—Bank but though the pledgee may be ignorant of the fact that the endorsements on the two War Bonds had been forged he takes the pledge at his peril, and, therefore, the appellants acquired no title whatever to the War Bonds, which had been pledged with them by O. S. Advani.

We do not find on the record that there was any negligence whatever on the part of the respondents. Nor is there any estoppel or any adoption of the endorsements. Under these circumstances though no doubt the position of the appellant-Bank is one of considerable hardship, we cannot but give effect to the law as it stands. We, therefore, think that the Trial Court is correct in its judgment and this appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Woman's estate—Suit for recovery of debt—Decree whether binds reversionary interest

A Hindu female heir represents the entire estate in respect of her own as well as the reversionary interest. Therefore, a creditor suing such a female should so frame his suit as to make it clear that he intends to bind the entire estate and not merely the limited or personal interest of the female, so as to put the other persons interested on their guard and to enable them to protect the estate if they care to do so, consequently, if the decree is a mere personal decree against the female, it binds only her personal and not the reversionary interest. [p 1005, col 2]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sixth Court, Dacca, dated the 13th August 1921.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him. Babus Suresh Chandra Taluqdar, Mohendra Kumar Ghose and Jatish Chandra Guha), for the Appellant—The plaintiff is the appellant here. The facts are these: the properties under dispute 'ka' and 'kha' as described in the Schedule belonged to one Bharat. Bharat died leaving two daughters, the plaintiff who was married at the time and Mon Mohini an unmarried daughter. Bharat had also three nephews one of whom Krishna was appointed guardian of Mon Mohini during her minority, she having inherited a Hindu woman's estate in the properties left by Bharat. Bharat left some debts as well. A decree was obtained against both the daughters for a sum of Rs. 88 odd on the 13th July 1883 on the basis of one of those debts. In order to pay that debt Krishna as guardian of the minor Mon Mohini borrowed a sum of Rs. 100 from one Kali Kumar Pal on his personal liability on 31st May 1884 without charging any of the properties left by Bharat. Instead of paying that debt Krishna executed a fresh bond in favour of the creditor for a sum of Rs. 160 in his capacity as the guardian of the minor. Kali Kumar instituted a suit against Mon Mohini and Krishna on the basis of that bond and got an ex parte decree against Mon Mohini personally for a sum of Rs. 226-8 on 14th February 1890. In execution of that decree the property of Schedule 'ka' was sold and it was purchased by the decree-holder. The sale-certificate bears the date 26th November 1891 and the property is in the possession of the defendant No. 1 who is the heir of the purchaser. This is the case of the defendant No. 1 with respect to property 'ka'.

With respect to property 'kha' the case of defendants Nos. 9 and 10 is that it was transferred by Bharat in his lifetime by oral gift in favour of his nephews of whom Krishna is one. The nephews mortgaged it and the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 who are possessing it now, purchased it at auction sale held in execution of the decree on that mortgage.

After Mon Mohini's death in 1908 the present plaintiff instituted this suit for the recovery of those properties as the next heir of Bharat. Her case with respect to property 'ka' is that Bharat had no debts, that the defendant No. 1's father was the real guardian of Mon Mohini and that the auction sale was a fraudulent and collusive one and that no interest was conveyed by that auction sale and that if it conveyed any interest at all it did not convey the entire estate but only the limited interest of Mon Mohini. With regard to property 'kha' her case is that there was no gift by Bharat to his nephews. But her suit has been entirely dismissed by the Court below.

While relying on all the pleas resorted to by my client with respect to property 'ka' I want to lay greatest stress upon the point that the auction sale passed only the limited interest of Mon Mohini if it passed any interest at all. The bond of 31st May 1884 was a personal bond of the guardian of the minor. The renewal of the bond took place on the 17th October 1887 i.e., after the first one had been barred. Therefore, any decree on the basis of the second bond would be ineffectual. Even the second bond was merely a personal one. No property left by Bharat was charged by it. Then again, the suit of the father of defendant No. 1 against Mon Mohini and her guardian was simply to have a personal decree against them. It was not for recovering the debt from the estate left by Bharat. The bond, however, was executed by the guardian while the decree was against the minor alone. This was neither lawful nor valid. The decree too was a personal one and not against the estate. The sale-certificate granted to the father of defendant No. 1 does not show that any interest beyond what the lady passed in her woman's estate was sold. The Privy Council case Barjun Doohey v. Brij Bhoomun Lall Awasthi (1) exactly fits in with the present case and the principles laid down in that case govern the present one.

With regard to property 'kha' my case is that there is absolutely no reliable evidence about the gift by Bharat and that the evidence adduced on behalf of defendants Nos. 9 and 10 has been sufficiently contradicted by my client.

Babu Dwaraka Nath Chakraborty (with him Babus Gunada Chandra Sen, Rajendra Chandra Guha, Priya Nath Dutt and Charu Chandra Chaudhury), for the Respondents.—What are the circumstances with regard to property 'kha'? There is sufficient evidence that there was an oral gift by Bharat in favour of his nephews. It is also in evidence that Bharat had affection for his brother's sons and also that those brother's sons had nursed him during his old age. Again the plaintiff's own evidence shows that Krishna was very affectionate towards his cousins, the plaintiff and Mon Mohini and acted for the purpose of preservation of their interest. What, again, is the value of the property? Its income is only Rs. 3, realised as rent and about 12 maunds of paddy per year. I think under these circumstances there is absolutely no reason for disbelieving the gift.

With regard to property 'ka' it has not been disproved that it was originally for a debt of Bharat that the decree against

Mon Mohini was obtained and it was in order to pay off that debt that the money was borrowed and the bond was executed. It is, of course, true that no charge was created upon any property by the renewed bond. But the original debt having been for lawful purposes the creditor may very well recover his debt from the estate left by Bharat. Again it has been said that the decree in execution of which the sale took place was personally against the minor alone and it was merely her own interest in the property which passed by the sale. But the female heir represents the entire estate. Therefore, the decree was virtually against the entire estate and what was sold was also the entire estate. The Privy Council case of Jugal Kishore v. Jatindra Mohan Tagore (2), relied on by the Court below, is my authority. My client's case is supported not only by law but by justice and equity as well. It has been urged that the renewal of the bond in October 1887 took place when the original bond of 1884 was barred. This point was not raised in the Court below. If it were raised there I would have proved that the bond was kept alive by acknowledgment as also by payment of interest. It has also been urged that the decree against the minor passed in 1890 was unlawful and invalid. I think it is too late in the day to raise that point now and here in this case. Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak replied in brief—I do not think it is necessary to add anything further with regard to property kha. There is no reliable evidence about the gift and whatever evidence was adduced has been sufficiently contradicted.

With respect to the other property, the female heir no doubt represents the entire estate in respect of her own as well as the reversionary interest. But for that very reason if the creditor seeks not only the woman's interest but the entire estate he is bound to give notice so as to put the other persons interested on their guard and to enable them to protect the estate if they so desire. In the case cited by the other side their Lordships in the Privy Council looked into the judgment of the case and ascertained from it that the entire interest was sold. In the present case this cannot be ascertained from the judgment.

JUDGMENT.—The suit giving rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff to recover certain properties as heir of her father one Bharat Chandra Basu. The properties had been placed in two Schedules ka and kha of the plaint. Bharat obtained the properties described in Schedule ka as heir of his son who had predeceased him, the son having inherited the properties from his maternal grandfather. The properties in Schedule kha were the ancestral properties of Bharat. Bharat died leaving two daughters, the plaintiff who was married at the time and Mon Mohini a maiden daughter. Mon Mohini, therefore, succeeded to the property left by Bharat obtaining a Hindu woman's estate. Bharat had also three nephews, his brother's sons. One of them Krishna was appointed guardian of Mon Mohini during her minority. It appears that Bharat died leaving some debts and a decree was obtained by the creditor one Ram Kumar Nag in a suit in which he made both the daughters of Bharat defendants. The decree was for Rs. 88 odd and was dated 13th July 1883. In order to pay off this debt Krishna as guardian of Mon Mohini borrowed a sum of Rs. 100 from one Kali Kumar Pal by a simple bond dated 31st May 1884. He executed this bond as the certificated guardian of Mon Mohini, and under that bond there was only the personal liability of the executant, no property left by Bharat being charged for the debt. No money was paid for that bond but a fresh bond was executed in favour of the creditor on the 17th October 1887 by Krishna purporting to act as guardian on behalf of Mon Mohini. This bond was for Rs. 160. The creditor, Kali Kumar Pal, brought a suit on the renewed bond in 1890 making both the minor Mon Mohini and her guardian Krishna defendants in the suit. The suit was decreed on the 14th February 1890, and the ordering portion of the decree runs thus. It is ordered that an ex parte decree be passed as against the defendant No. 1 for the claim in suit with costs together with interest and that the defendant No. 1 do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 226-8. The defendant No. 1 was the lady Mon Mohini. This decree was put in execution and the properties mentioned in Schedule ka of the plaint were sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The date of the sale-certificate is 27th November 1891 and the properties in Schedule ka are now in the possession of his heir, the defendant No. 1. The properties described in Schedule kha were said to have been transferred by Bharat in his lifetime by oral gift in favour of his brother's sons, one of whom was Krishna aforesaid. Those donees had executed mortgages in favour of certain persons with regard to these properties and the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 purchased those properties on being sold in execution of the mortgage decree by the creditors and they are now in possession of those properties.

Mon Mohini died sometime in 1908 and the plaintiff brings this suit for the recovery of the properties on the allegation that she is entitled to those properties as the next heir of Bharat. The Court below has dismissed the suit entirely. The plaintiff claimed the properties in various grounds. She impeached the auction sales as fraudulent and collusive and also alleged that defendant No. 1's father was actually acting as the guardian of Mon Mohini, and also denied that Bharat had any debts. The real question, however, and that is the point which has been urged before us, is whether the sale in 1891 of the properties in Schedule ka conveyed the entire interest in the properties or only the limited interest of the minor Mon Mohini. With regard to the properties in Schedule kha it was urged that there was no reliable evidence of the gift and the lower Court was wrong in holding that the evidence of the gift had not been contradicted by the plaintiff.

The claim with regard to the properties in Schedule kha may be disposed of at once. We find from the evidence that the properties were of very small value, the income only being Rs. 3 realised as rent and about 12 maunds of paddy per year. It is in evidence that Bharat had affection for his brother's sons and also that those brother's sons had nursed him during his old age. It also appears from the evidence on the plaintiff's side that Krishna was very affectionate towards his cousins the plaintiff and Mon Mohini, and had acted for the purpose of preservation of their interest. It does not appear to us that there is any good ground for disbelieving the evidence that there was an oral gift by Bharat in favour of his nephews. If that is so the plaintiff cannot lay any claim to those properties. The appeal, therefore, with regard to the properties in Schedule kha is dismissed.

The decision of the right as regards the properties in Schedule ka depends upon the fact as to whether the sale in 1891 conveyed the entire interest in the properties to the father of defendant No. 1. It is no doubt true that a decree was obtained against Mon Mohini for the debts owed by Bharat and that money was borrowed upon the bond of 31st May 1884 in order to pay off that decree. The guardian could certainly under the law have created a valid charge on the property for that debt, but apparently the creditor was satisfied with having only the personal undertaking of the guardian to pay that amount. This bond was renewed on the 17th October 1887. One objection was made on behalf of the appellant that this renewal was after the date when the previous bond had been barred by limitation. This point was, however, not raised in the Court below, and although from the dates of the two bonds it would appear that the debt was barred on the 17th October 1887 it may be that it was kept alive by acknowledgment or payment of interest. However that may be, by the second bond of 1887 the creditor was satisfied by taking a simple money bond, as it is called, without any charge having been created on the property. It is possible that although no charge was created the original debt having been for lawful purposes the creditor might have recovered his debt from the estate left by Bharat if he had chosen to do so. But in order to make the estate liable he ought to have framed his suit in a proper manner. What he asked for was simply to have a personal decree against Mon Mohini and the guardian who was made the second defendant. The Court passed a decree against the minor alone. It does not appear any where that the minor was made a party to the suit as representing her father's estate.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that a decree against the minor ought not to have been passed on the bond executed by the guardian. But it is not open to us to decide whether the decree of 1890 was wrongly made against the minor. Besides having regard to the question urged that the sale only transferred the interest of Mon Mohini in the property the question is immaterial. The sale certificate which was granted to the father of defendant No. 1 does not show that the entire interest in the property was sold as is contended on behalf of the defendant No. 1. What was sold was all rights and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property which does not of itself show that any interest beyond what the lady possessed in her woman's estate was sold. No doubt if the proceedings in the suit and the sale notification had contained any materials from which it could have been held that the decret-holder had intended to sell the entire interest in the property and not merely the limited interest of the daughter, the statement that only the rights and interest of the judgment-debtor was sold would not have been of value in representing what interest in the property had been purchased. The decree itself shows that it was only a personal decree and, therefore, we must hold even if the foundation of the decree be a liability which might bind the reversioner this is not sufficient. The suit ought to have been so framed that it would show that it was intended to bind the entire estate and not merely to enforce a personal liability against the daughter. The female heir, no doubt, represents the entire estate in respect of her own as well as the reversionary interest, and for that very reason the creditor is bound to give notice that he is seeking a larger remedy so as to put the other persons interested on their guard and to enable them to protect the estate if they had thought fit. Here the bond did not charge the property as it might have done. The decree was not against the lady as representing the estate but a mere personal decree and the proceedings leading up to the sale have not been produced and, therefore, under these circumstances we hold that the case is governed, by the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Baijūn Dubey v. Brij Bhokun Lal Awasti (1). The Court below has relied on the Privy Council case of Jugal Kishore v. Jatindra Mohan Tagore (2). But in that case their Lordships held that the entire interest was sold after looking into the judgment in the case in order to ascertain what was sold.

We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to the property in Schedule ka after the death of her sister Mon Mohini. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff by stating various untrue facts in the lower Court unnecessarily complicated the matter, we are of opinion that she is not entitled to the costs in the Court below.

The decree of the lower Court is varied to this extent that the plaintiff will get a decree for the property described in Schedule ka except property No. 3 about which there was a compromise and her suit with regard to property in Schedule kha will be dismissed. She will get 2/3rds of her costs of this appeal from defendant No. 1. The defendants Nos. 9 and 10 who are respondents in this Court will get 1/3rd of their costs of this appeal from the plaintiff-appellant and they will also get their costs in the First Court. The defendant No. 1 will bear his own costs in both Courts. The plaintiff will also get a decree for mesne

JUDGMENT.—The deceased first plaintiff and Ichikutti Pisharasiar are the assignees of Exhibit A. Exhibit A is a kazhaka kanom document executed in favour of Gopal Pisharody and Narayani Pisharasiar by the ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the 3rd defendant who are the trustees of a deva-swom. The document recites that a sum of Rs. 100 was received by the trustees from Gopal Pisharody and Narayani Pisharasiar. It was while these two were performing the kazhakam service in the temple as deputies of one Chovallor Variar under some arrangement made with him that the trustees of the devaswom persuaded them to advance a kanom of Rs. 100 as security for the due performance of the kazhakam and executed kazhaka kanom deed, Exhibit A, in their favour. The decessed first plaintiff and his sister obtaining the assignment of the kazhakam service as mentioned above carried on their duties in the temple for about 16 years.
In the meanwhile, the rights of the family of Chovallor Variar to perform the kaza-hakam service in the temple were established in a litigation between the Variar and the trustees. In that litigation it was found that the entrust-ment of the kazhakam service to the assignors of the present plaintiffs was a fraudulent one intended to defeat the rights of Chovallor Variar. After establishing his rights Chovallor Variar obtained a decree against the deceased first plaintiff and Ichikutti Pisharasiar and in execution of that decree the kazhakam service was surrendered and the plaintiffs were deprived possession of the building they were in occupation.
In consequence of this they have instituted the suit out of which this second appeal arises praying that a decree may be passed directing the defendants personally and by means of the devaswom properties to pay them the amount which was received as kazhaka kanom on behalf of the devaswom under Exhibit
A. It has been found by the Courts below that the plaintiffs are bona fide trans-ferees who have paid consideration for the assignment, Exhibit C, of the right to perform the kazhakam service which their predecessors obtained under Exhibit A from the trustees of the devaswom. Both the lower Courts have decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

The learned Vakil for the respondents takes a preliminary objection that the plaintiffs' suit is one of a small cause nature for the recovery of a sum below Rs. 500 and hence no second appeal would lie to the High Court; Mr. Ramachandra Iyer on behalf of the appellants contends that, under Art. 18, Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX, of 1887, the present suit is exempted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. Under Art. 18, a suit relating to a trust including a suit to make good out of the general estate of a deceased trustee the loss occasioned by a breach of the trust, and a suit by a co-trustee to enforce against the estate of the deceased trustee a claim for contribution are excepted from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. The last part of the Article is admittedly inapplicable to the facts of the present case. The question, therefore, for consideration is whether the present suit is a suit relating to a trust, or a suit to make good out of the general estate of a deceased trustee the loss occasioned by a breach of the trust. From the summary given above of the essential facts of the case, it seems clear that the suit is one for the recovery of money against the defendants personally and from the devaswom properties. In order to decide the question raised in the suit, it may be necessary to determine whether the trust property is liable, but this cannot make the suit one relating to a trust. [See Sri Venkatachallapathy Sahaya Viyasaya v. Kanagasabhapathia Pillai (1)]. That was a suit, as pointed out in Krishnayyar v. Soundararaja Ayyangar (2), by a trustee against his predecessor-in-office for loss to the cestui que trust by the defendant's negligence for breach of trust. It may be that Exhibit A was executed fraudulently by the trustees to defeat the rights of Chovallor Variar, but on account of that finding in a suit to which the present plaintiff were not parties, I do not think it can be said that the cause of the action for the present suit is a breach of trust by the trustees. The present plaintiffs have paid consideration for the assignment of the kazhakam service, and since they were deprived of their rights, they are asking for a refund of the money from the defendants personally and from the devaswom funds. I do not think that the fraudulent motive of the trustee in executing the document under which the present plaintiffs now claim the refund of the money can make the present suit one relating to a trust. If it is a suit not relating to a trust, it is argued that this must be considered as a suit to make good out of the general estate of the deceased trustee the loss occasioned by a breach of trust. The allegations in the plaint clearly show that the suit is against the trust and for the recovery of the money from the trust funds, not against the general estate of the deceased trustee for loss occasioned by a breach of trust. The plaintiffs' suit is one for the recovery of a sum of money below Rs. 500 from the defendants personally and from out of the devaswom funds. In my opinion, this is clearly a suit of a small cause nature and is not excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Courts under Art. 18 of the Second Schedule. I allow the preliminary objection.

After the close of the arguments it was stated by the learned Vakil for the appellants that his second appeal might be treated as a civil revision petition. No alternative civil revision petition has been filed and obviously no question of jurisdiction arises in this case.

I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

The settled practice of the High Court is to interfere as little as possible with interlocutory orders where an alternative remedy exists. But it cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that the Court will under no circumstances interfere. The High Court can and will interfere with such orders when they may lead to a failure of justice or to irreparable injury. [p. 1009, col. 2; p. 1010, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fifth Court, at Dacca refusing to expunge two issues which have been framed in an account suit brought by the petitioners Srimati Saraju Bala Debi and others through Mr. F. W. Needham, representing the Court of Wards against the opposite party (defendant No. 1) Mohini Mohan Ghose and others.

The facts which have given rise to the application as stated therein, are as follows:

The claim made in the suit covered the period from Ashar 1314, when the defendant Mohini Mohan was appointed Natb, of Dehi Kuromitola of the Bhawal Estate, up to the time when he was suspended in Ashar 1325 B. S. At the date when he was appointed Kumar Ranendra Narayan Rai, Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai, and Kumar Robindra Narayan Rai were the proprietors of the Bhawal Estate in equal shares. On the 15th Jaist 1314 the defendant No. 1 executed a jaminnama or service security bond in favour of three Kumars stating therein that, as he had no immoveable property, his father would execute another bond as his surety and would pledge some immoveable property. That bond was in due course executed on the 19th Jaista 1315, and as there was a mistake in it, and as the second Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai died on the 8th May 1909 (Bysak 1316), a rectified deed was executed on the 29th Ashar 1316 in favour of the two surviving Kumars and the widow of the second Kumar as his heir.

The first and third Kumars died on the 14th September 1910 and 13th September 1913 respectively leaving their widows, the plaintiffs Nos 1 and 4 as heirs, and subsequent thereto the Court of Wards declared all the three widows to be disqualified proprietors, and assumed charge of the properties.

In the year 1920 an individual dressed in the garb of a Sanayasi appeared on the scene and claimed to be the second Kumar, but the Board of Revenue after making an enquiry found that the second Kumar was dead and that the claimant was an imposter. In the meanwhile the defendant No. 1 had been dismissed from his post and had been called upon to explain and adjust his accounts, and on his failing to do so the suit, out of which the present application has arisen, was filed on the 25th June 1921.

In his written statement filed on the 18th November 1922 the defendant No. 1 raised inter alia the plea that, as the second Kumar was alive, his widow the plaintiff No. 2 had no right or title in the estate, and that, therefore, neither she nor the Court of Wards on her behalf could sue for accounts in respect of those properties, and an Issue (No. 3 was accordingly framed in these terms: "Can plaintiff No. 2 maintain this suit? Is her husband alive?"

Upon the plaintiffs raising objection, the Subordinate Judge held that, as the suit was based on kabuliyats executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of plaintiff No. 2 and the Court of Wards, and as the validity of the kabuliyats was not questioned, the issue suggested did not arise, and it was accordingly struck off. The defendant No. 1, then on the 14th July, 1921 filed an additional written statement alleging that he had been induced to execute the kabuliyats on misrepresentation as to the death of the second Kumar, and, in consequence of coercion and threats that he would be dismissed, if he did not execute them. They were not, therefore, it was urged, binding upon him, and he asked that issues might be framed upon his additional written statement. The plaintiffs objected, but the Court yielding to the defendant's prayer accepted the additional written statement and framed thereon Issues Nos. 9 and 10 in the following terms:

"9. Were the documents mentioned in the plaint executed under undue influence, misrepresentation, and a mistake of facts as alleged in the written statement?"

10. Is the second Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai alive? If so, is the suit maintainable at the instance of plaintiff No. 2?"

The plaintiffs then filed a petition stating that the suit was maintainable even assuming that the second Kumar was alive, and praying that Issue No. 10 might be tried on that supposition, and the Court on the 13th January 1923 held that, if the Kumar was alive, the suit was not maintainable and refused to expunge Issue No. 10.

Subsequently the plaintiffs by another petition gave up so much of the claim as related to the defendant's service prior to the death of the second Kumar on the 8th May 1909, and prayed that in the circumstances Issues Nos. 9 and 10 might be expunged, but the Court by its order of the 25th September, 1923 refused to expunge them, and the plaintiffs thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the opposite party to the hearing of the Rule on the ground that the application was not properly stamped, and it was submitted that upon the affidavit filed by the petitioners no case has been made out for the exercise of the discretion vested in us to allow the Court-fee to be put in after the due time. We do not think there is any substance in this objection, and on the facts stated in the affidavit we are of opinion that the explanation ought to be accepted and the Court-fee allowed to be put in, and we order accordingly.

Coming to the merits it is urged on behalf of the petitioners that the two issues referred to above are unnecessary for the decision of the suit, which is based upon a contract for service, and in which no question of title to immoveable property is involved, that, if the question of title is allowed to be raised, the scope of the suit will be unnecessarily widened resulting in serious delay and expense out of all proportion to the real issue involved and that in fact the entire character of the suit will be changed. It was further suggested that the defendant No. 1 having made common cause with the sanyasi claimant has sought to raise these issues with the ulterior object to helping him in his campaign against the plaintiffs, it being pointed out that any finding arrived at in this case would not be binding upon the claimant, who is not a party to the litigation, though it would be upon the plaintiffs.

On behalf of the opposite party it is urged that the long established practice of this Court has been not to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction with interlocutory orders where another and an adequate remedy is open to the applicant, that that remedy will be available by means of an appeal after the suit has been decided and that no case has been made out for our interference.

We are not much impressed with this non possumus argument. No doubt it has been the settled practice of this

SARAJU BALA DEBI v. MOHINI MOHAN GHOSH.

Court to interfere as little as possible with interlocutory orders where an alternative remedy exists. It cannot, however, be laid down as a hard and fast rule that the Court will under no circumstances interfere. On the contrary there is ample authority for the view that this Court can, and will interfere with such orders where they may lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury, see Dhapi v. Ram Pershad (1), Gobind Mohan Das v. Kunjo Behary Das (2), Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (3) and Siva Prosad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverji Bhoja (4). The question is whether the conditions referred to above are present here so as to justify us in interfering. The decision of the matter appears to depend upon two considerations, viz., first, whether the proposed additional issues are relevant and necessary, and secondly, whether, if they are not so, the trying of them is likely to lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury to the petitioners. The first of these is the really crucial point because, if the issues are necessary and proper, it could hardly be urged with logic or propriety that they may involve a failure of justice or irreparable injury, since, if they are material and necessary issues, the defendant is entitled to go to trial upon them, however great the expenditure of time and money may be. But are they necessary? Prima facie one would be inclined to say that the trial of such an issue as to title involving the mass of evidence documentary and otherwise necessary to the decision thereon, is wholly outside the scope of a suit for accounts, especially in view of the fact that the claim for the period prior to May 1909, was withdrawn. Whatever may have been the legal position in regard to the period up to May 1909, it would seem that after July 1909, when the father of the defendant No. 1 executed the deed of rectification in favour of the two Kumars and the widow of the second Kumar, it was no longer upon to the defendant No. 1 to refuse to account to the widow. There can be no question that subsequent to July 1909 the defendant No. 1 was permitted to make his collections by virtue of that deed executed by his father indemnifying the two Kumars and the widow in respect of acts done by the defendant No. 1 and that all collections made after that date were made on account of the two Kumars and the widow. In view of those facts it appears to us that the defendant cannot be allowed to raise the question whether he is liable to account to the widow, and to set up the title of a third party.

There can be no doubt that under section 51 of the Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879) the Court of Wards alone was legally competent to institute the suit. The second Kumar had been held by competent authority after due inquiry to have died in 1909, and unless and until it is established in a Court of law that he is alive and that his title subsists, the Manager under the Court of Wards was the only person legally competent to institute the suit on behalf the estate.

Having regard to these facts and considerations we hold that the trial of these two issues in the present suit is unnecessary.

The next question is whether, assuming them to be unnecessary and irrelevant, the trial of them is likely to lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury to the petitioners. We think that both possibilities undoubtedly exist, indeed that there is something more than a bare possibility that one or both of these consequences may ensue. It is clear from the materials before us that, if the issue of title is tried, it will involve the importation of mass of evidence both documentary and oral. Applications have already been made for the examination on commission of a number of witnesses. It seems to us to be eminently undesirable that all this evidence should be gone into in a simple account suit. It is plain, moreover, that very great delay in the disposal of the suit would necessarily result. The value of the suit is stated to be Rs. 6,926 odd, and it has been suggested before us that, if these issues are included, the cost of the litigation may amount to something like a lac of rupees. That may be an exaggerated estimate. The fact, however, remains that the trial of these issues will undoubtedly entail an expenditure both of time and money wholly out of proportion to the matter in dispute, and the delay consequent upon the scope of the suit being thus widened might be extremely prejudicial to the plaintiffs and result in their failing to obtain justice. Nor can there be any doubt that, if the issues are unnecessary, as we hold they are, the trial upon them is likely to cause irreparable injury to the plaintiffs since they will be put to the enormous extra expense involved, and as far as can be seen, with little prospect of recovering those expenses, even if they succeed in the suit. It may be true that the plaintiffs are persons of substance, and well able to bear the extra expense. That, however, is beside the point and cannot alter the fact that the plaintiffs may suffer irreparable loss. It is plain, from the materials before us that the defendant No. 1 is not a person of any substance, and in fact it was on that account that the second jamminnama was taken from his father. That being so, it becomes problematical whether in the event of their success in the litigation, the plaintiffs would be able to recover the costs from the defendant.

The suggestion that these issues should be added is presumably due to an apprehension in the mind of the defendant No. 1 that after the suit has been decided, and if the decision be adverse to him, he may hereafter still find that he is accountable to the sanyasi claimant in the event of his succeeding in establishing that he is the second Kumar. Assuming that such an apprehension exists the object in view would seem to be to secure a speedy decision of the account suit without in any way prejudicing the defendant, and we suggested subsequent to the hearing of the Rule that the parties should consult together with a view to arriving at a solution of the difficulty satisfactory to both sides. In the result the learned Advocate-General intimated on behalf of the petitioners that both the Manager under the Court of Wards and the widow (plaintiff No. 2) were prepared to execute bonds of indemnity in favour of the defendant No. 1 indemnifying him against any loss whatsoever. It seems to us that that is a fair offer, and that the defendant No. 1 can have no reasonable excuse for refusing to accept it.

Upon a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances we are of opinion that the trial of the suit ought not to be complicated by dragging in these issues which are outside its scope and wholly irrelevant and unnecessary, and the trial of which would inevitably prolong the litigation to the serious prejudice of the plaintiffs. We accordingly make the Rule, direct that the issues in questions Nos 9 and 10 be expunged and that the suit be now proceeded with according to law on the indemnity bonds being executed by the Manager under the Court of Wards and by the plaintiff No. 2 in accordance with the offer made by them.

The costs of this Rule will be paid by the opposite party to the petitioners. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

The High Court will not interfere in revision upon a technical question of limitation where substantial justice has been done.

Where it was open to argument whether limitation in a suit for recovery of debt should run from one date or another but the debt was really due, the High Court refused to interfere in revision and upheld the decree in favour of the creditor.

In a suit brought against the defendant by one K, plaintiff stood surety for the defendant that the latter would pay the price of coal sold to him by K. K obtained a decree against the plaintiff as surety. In order to obtain a review of judgment plaintiff deposited the amount of the decree in Court on the 5th September 1919 but the application for review was dismissed and K withdrew the amount on 21st April 1920. The plaintiff then brought his suit on the 20th April 1923 to recover the money from the defendant, his principal. It was contended that the date of payment to the creditor was the date of deposit, and therefore, the suit was barred by limitation under Art 81 of the Limitation Act. Held, that as the creditor was not entitled to withdraw the money immediately it was deposited by the plaintiff in Court and before the application for review was dismissed, the date of deposit in Court was not the date of payment to the creditor.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Roorki, dated the 12th December 1923.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Kamal-ud-din brought a suit against Mohammad Naqi on behalf of whom the present plaintiff, Lala Hargu Lal, stood security for Mohammad Naqi, that the latter would pay the price of the coal sold to him by Kamal-ud-din. Kamal-ud-din obtained a decree against the present plaintiff as surety. In order to obtain a review the plaintiff deposited the amount of the decree under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. He made the deposit on the 5th of September 1919. The application for review was dismissed and the creditor withdrew the money on the 21st of April 1920. Subsequently the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the money from his principal filing his suit on the 20th of April 1923. A plea was taken in the Court of Small Causes that the suit was barred by limitation under Art 81 of the Limitation Act. That Article allows a period of three years from the date "when the surety pays the creditor." It is urged that the date of the payment to the creditor was the 5th of September 1919 i.e., the date of the deposit, and the defendant has relied on the case reported as Yinke Supay v. Maung Kin (1). The plaintiff urged and the lower Court accepted the plea that limitation commenced to run from the 21st of April 1920 and held that the suit was within time. It is open to argument that the date on which the creditor was paid was the date on which the application for review was actually dismissed because from that date the creditor was entitled to withdraw the money but this at least is quite certain that he was not entitled to withdraw the money immediately it was deposited and before the application for review had been dismissed. The plea, therefore, as urged by the defendant could certainly not be sustained. Neither party can tell me on what date the application for review was dismissed and, failing to make good his plea that the date of deposit was the date from which limitation commenced to run, the defendant applicant here asks me to send for the record in order to ascertain the date on which the application for review was dismissed. On the other hand, the plaintiff opposite party here urges that this Court should not interfere in civil revision upon a question of limitation and has referred me to Raghu Nath Sahai v. The Official Liquidator of the Himalaya Bank, Limited (2) and Sarman Lal v. Khuban (3). The latter case is not so clearly in point as the former, for it is not clear that in the latter case the question of limitation did not depend upon a question of fact as well as upon a question of law. The earlier case is, however, directly in point. For the opposite party I am referred to Lt. Col. J. G. Turner v. Jagmohan Singh (4). Whatever else that case may have decided it certainly did not decide that the Court should interfere on a technical ground where substantial justice had been done. It is perfectly clear in this case that whether the period of limitation should be held to run from the date when the application for review was dismissed or from the date when the creditor withdrew the money, the debt which has been sued for in this case was undoubtedly due from the principal to the surety and unless this Court was to hold that it has no discretion whatever it is indubitably a case in which a discretion should be exercised in favour of the opposite party in this case I, therefore, decline to interfere and dismiss this application.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—The question which arises for decision in this appeal by the plaintiff is—Was the certificate which was issued under Act III of 1913 under which the sale of the holding in question took place, a valid and binding one? The facts which are relevant for this appeal may be shortly stated thus. The plaintiff Munshi Ali Miyam and the defendant No. 2 Asgar were the owners of a holding under the khas mehal in Chittagong and a certificate, dated the 19th February 1917, was filed by the Certificate Officer and the holding in arrears was sold on the 11th June 1917 and purchased by the defendant No. 1 for Rs. 46.

The plaintiff instituted this suit for a declaration that the sale was not binding on him and in the alternative prayed for a re-conveyance of his 8-annas share on payment of half the purchase-money. Among other matters which are not material, the plaintiff contended that the certificate was not a certificate, signed and made, under the provisions of section 4 of the Act, and, therefore, the sale was without jurisdiction.

The plaintiff further alleged that a property worth Rs. 3,000 was sold for Rs. 46 and in consequence he suffered substantial injury.

The Secretary of State for India was defendant No. 3 in the suit.

All the defendants contested the suit and contended that the certificate did comply with the provisions of the law and they traversed the other allegations of the plaintiff.

Both the Courts have dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals and four points were taken by the learned Vakil on his behalf in support of the appeal, and the first of those was the point which we have indicated as the point which calls for decision in this case.

VITHOBA V. BHIMAI.

In the view that we take of the first point it is unnecessary to say anything as regards the other points.

The point now in issue with respect to a certificate issued under Act III of 1913, was raised in a case before a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of the Hon'ble Justice C. C. Ghose and the Hon'ble Justice Pantun in Second Appeal No. 1352 of 1921 and was decided on the 28th February 1923. In that case also the certificate was of a similar nature, and their Lordships held that the certificate was invalid. The certificate in the present case contained no entry in that part of it which is really the certificate in the prescribed form, giving any of the particulars in the handwriting of the office competent to issue such a certificate. In view of the fact that the case cited is in all fours with this case and the principles upon which the decision of the question depends have been laid down by the Judicial Committee in Baignath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (1) we do not think it necessary to discuss the point at any length. These certificates are issued ex parte and have the force of decrees for the debts therein mentioned, it is of the utmost importance for the safety of the public that the form of the certificate should be strictly complied with. This certificate with the entries filled up by the hand of a responsible officer like the Certificate Collector ensures that that officer did apply his mind to the correctness or otherwise of those entries.

The learned Vakil for the respondents was unable to draw any real distinction between this case and the unreported judgment to which we have referred.

The result is we set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the suit of the plaintiff with respect to his first prayer with costs in both Courts.

If a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believes to be correct information to the Police, and the Police without further interference on his part, except giving such honest assistance as they may require, think fit to prosecute, it is improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution [p 1016, col. 2]

On the other hand if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant, if he misleads the Police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it, and if he influences the Police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate, it is improper to allow him to escape the liability because the prosecution has not technically been conducted by him [ibid]

The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion in deciding who the prosecutor is. The conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must also be taken into consideration [ibid]

A prosecution, though at the outset, not malicious, as having been undertaken at the dictation of a Judge or Magistrate, or if spontaneously undertaken, from having been commenced under a bona fide belief in the guilt of the accused, may nevertheless become malicious in any of the stages through which it has to pass, if the prosecutor, having acquired positive knowledge of the innocence of the accused, perseveres malo animo in the prosecution with the intention of procuring per nefas a conviction of the accused. [ibid]

An award of all legitimate expenses incurred by a successful accused person for his or her defence and for establishing his or her innocence in criminal cases, is always justifiable as those expenses are the direct and necessary consequences of the false and malicious prosecution. VITHOBA V. BHIMAI.

• Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 29th April 1922, in Civil Suit No. 230 of 1920.

Mr. M. R. Bhide, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will govern both the appeals. First Appeal No. 36-B of 1922 arises out of Suit No. 230 of 1920, while First Appeal No. 59-B of 1922 arises out of Suit No. 202 of 1920 of the file of the Additional Sub-Judge, Akola. Both these suits have been disposed of by the judgment dated 29th April 1922 in Suit No. 230 of 1920 as the parties agreed that the two cases be consolidated and disposed of together. In Suit No. 230 of 1920 the plaintiff, Musammam Bhimai, claim compensation from the defendant, Vithoba, for malicious prosecution under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and valued her claim at Rs. 5,932, while in Suit No. 202 of 1920 the plaintiff's claim was for Rs. 1,100 on account of compensation for malicious prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code. This latter claim was made against the defendant, Vithoba, and as also against his son Kashiram. The plaintiff succeeded in getting a decree for Rs. 4,032 in Suit No. 230 of 1920 and for Rs. 1,050 in Suit No. 202 of 1920 against the respective defendant or defendants and these appeals have been filed against the said decrees by the person or persons against whom the same have been passed.

The arguments, in support of these appeals, have been addressed in First Appeal No. 36-B of 1922 in particular. I will, therefore, proceed to discuss first the arguments on points common to both and then take up any points, which may be special to either case.

The facts have been sufficiently set forth in the judgment of the lower Court in Civil Suit No. 230 of 1920. I need not, therefore, recapitulate them here. I do not also, for the same reasons, propose to re-produce in detail the respective pleadings of the parties in this judgment. Suffice it to say, in brief, that according to the plaintiff, the defendant, Vithoba, who is her husband's cousin, is coveting the estate, which she has inherited from her husband, Dattoo Patel, and with that object in view; he has, from time to time, made several endeavours to deprive her of it, by hook or crook. Being thus mischievously and maliciously inclined towards her, he is said to have given currency to false stories about her conduct and made false reports to the Police and started false prosecutions against her. The prosecutions (1) under section 302, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola (Case No. 36 of 1919) and (2) under section 323, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the Bench Magistrate, Balapur (Case No. 75 of 1919) are said to be such false prosecutions. They have ended in plaintiff's favour, she having been discharged by the Magistrate, in each case. It must be mentioned, for the sake of clearness, that it is the plaintiff's case that in the prosecution under section 302, Indian Penal Code, the real prosecutor was the defendant although it was conducted by the Police. The other prosecution, of course, was started upon a complaint made in the name of defendant Kashiram but according to the plaintiff there also Kashiram and his father Vithoba acted in concert. In short, the plaintiff alleges that the defendant, Vithoba, is responsible for both the prosecutions, and that as he started them without any reasonable and probable cause and out of malice he is liable to her in damages. On behalf of the defendant, who is also the Police Patel of the village, it is contended that his position, as a Police Patel of the village, imposed upon him a duty to report all occurrences and render all such help to the Police as would bring to their notice the commission of an offence and even enable them to prevent offences taking place, and that in making the reports to the Police, which led to the starting of the prosecution under section 302, Indian Penal Code, he acted in his official capacity and not without any reasonable and probable cause or with malice. It is admitted, on behalf of the defendant or defendants, that the plaintiff was discharged in both the criminal cases for want of evidence.

The following points may be formulated as being material for the proper decision of these appeals:—

(1) (a) Was defendant, Vithoba, instrumental in getting the prosecution under section 302, Indian Penal Code, started against plaintiff?

(b) Did defendant, Vithoba, lodge the complaint under section 323, Indian Penal Code, through his son Kashiram against the plaintiff?

(2) Whether the aforesaid prosecutions were without reasonable and probable cause and also malicious?

(3) What amount of compensation is awardable to plaintiff in each case?

The Additional Sub-Judge, who decided the two suits has taken pains over the case; after setting forth the law, bearing on the points involved, as laid down by the Privy Council; he has proceeded to ascertain whether the facts necessary for the success of the plaintiff have been established by her as required by law. It would, therefore, be useful to state, at the outset, the law as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (1) and then discuss the correctness or otherwise of the proceedings of the Court below. This Privy Council case has been applied by the Madras High Court in Periya Goundan v. Kuppa Goundan (2). Both these decisions are accepted by the appellant's Counsel as guiding decisions on the points I have to decide. It is, however, complained that the Judge of the lower Court has not ascertained fully the several facts necessary to be established as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council and that consequently he erred in thinking that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed although, as a matter of fact, the data placed by her before the Court in support of her claims was insufficient.

to warrant the passing of any decrees in her favour. I am, therefore, asked to discharge the decrees passed by the Court below.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have observed as follows at page 533* of the report of their decision in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (1).

"In India the Police have special powers in regard to the investigation of criminal charges, and it depends very much on the result of their investigation whether or not further proceedings are taken against the person accused. If, therefore, a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believes to be correct information to the Police, and the Police without further interference on his part (except giving such honest assistance as they may require), think fit to prosecute, it would be improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution. But if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant, if he misleads the Police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it, if he influences the Police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate it would be equally improper to allow him to escape liability because the prosecution has not, technically, been conducted by him. The question, in all cases of this kind must be—who was the prosecutor?—and the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion; the conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge, must also be taken into consideration. Nor is it enough to say, the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the Police. That again is a question of fact. Theoretically all prosecutions are conducted in the name and on behalf of the Crown; but in practice this duty is often left in the hands of the person immediately aggrieved by the offence, who pro hac vice represents the Crown. In India a private person may be allowed to conduct a prosecution under section 495 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that any Magistrate inquiring into or trying any case may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than an officer of Police. Any person conducting the prosecution may do so personally or by a Pleader. When this is permitted, it is obviously an element to be taken into consideration in judging who is the prosecutor and what are his means of information and motives. The foundation of the action is malice, and malice may be shown at any time in the course of the inquiry."

Their Lordships support their observations by the following extracts in Fitzjohn v. Mackinder (3) from Bramwell, B J and Cockburn, C J's judgments, respectively—

"This action is not for damages in respect of the indictment only, but also for the residue of the prosecution, and the damage consequent upon it. Where an action is maintainable in respect of the whole prosecution, including the preferring of the bill, it is in part maintainable for the subsequent stages and conduct of it."

"A prosecution, though in the outset not malicious, as having been undertaken at the dictation of a Judge or Magistrate, or, if spontaneously undertaken, from having been commenced under a bona fide belief in the guilt of the accused, may nevertheless become malicious in any of the stages through which it has to pass, if the prosecutor, having acquired positive knowledge of the innocence of the accused, perseveres malò animo in the prosecution, with the intention of procuring per nefas a conviction of the accused."

The above tests laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council must be satisfied in every suit for compensation for malicious prosecution. I will examine the facts in the light of the said tests and see how far plaintiff has substantiated her allegation that the defendant Vithoba was the prosecutor in both the criminal cases and after this is done, I will next consider the question how far the prosecutions were malicious, and without reasonable and probable cause and to what extent the defendant's liability is established.

Plaintiff's husband died in 1910 and for a period of nine years there was nothing against her character. It is only twice in 1919 that attempts have been made to blacken her character. From the absence of any evidence to show that the plaintiff had carried any intrigues with anybody else or for the matter of that with any of her low caste servants during the first ten years of her widowhood, I am entitled to draw a presumption that her character was pure and unblemished when she was in the prime of her youth. In view of this presumption the story, that when she became advanced in age and was nearing thirty-five she lapsed in prostitution and began to have illicit connection with her Mahar servant, sounds highly improbable. It is equally improbable that she would make an exhibition of herself after conception, if she at all conceived, as the result of her illicit connection, with her favourite servant Soma Mahar. The defendant, Vithoba, has been on inimical terms with the plaintiff since long, his attempts at depriving her of the estate have failed in the past, and it is, therefore, very likely that he hit upon the idea of depriving her at least of her control over the estate, as the natural guardian of her minor son Shamrao, and with that end in view imputed immoral character to her as disqualifying her for continuing as a guardian, and, therefore, concocted the story about the pregnancy, and gave currency to it in order to bring her into disgrace and blacken her character, in the eyes of the public, and particularly, of the caste people and relations, with the ultimate object of paving his own way to the estate, in her hands, or at least to secure a strong hold on the same under colour of a claim to guardianship of her minor son's person and property. The admitted report to the Police dated 2nd June 1919 that Bhimai was pregnant and may try to cause abortion appears, therefore, to be in the nature of a peshbandi to support the future application, dated 1st July 1919 for guardianship which was lodged actually on 1st August 1919 in the Court of the District Judge Akola, by alleging therein that the boy's natural mother was unfit to act as a guardian as she was leading an unchaste and immoral life. But he wanted to prepare the ground still further by lodging beforehand a criminal complaint against the plaintiff and Soma Mahar under section 323, Indian Penal Code (Exhibit P-2) on 4th July 1919. These proceedings were pending from 4th July 1919 to 23rd December 1919 but so far as plaintiff Bhimai was concerned, they terminated on 26th November 1919 when she was discharged by the Magistrate for want of sufficient evidence (Exhibit P-3). Between 4th July 1919 and 26th November 1919 there were 13 hearings and at every hearing she was personally present. She could not attend the hearings dated 5th November 1919 and 10th November 1919 owing to her arrest in the case started against her under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code for an offence of having given birth to an illegitimate child and of having subsequently killed it. The several hearings which took place in the case under section 323, Indian Penal Code, were at short intervals as the following dates:—8th August 1919, 20th August 1919, 10th September 1919, 17th September 1919, 27th September 1919, 9th October 1919, 17th October 1919, 29th October 1919, 5th November 1919, 10th November 1919, 21st November 1919, 24th November 1919 and 26th November 1919 will show.

Out of these hearings those dated 8th August 1919, 20th August 1919, 10th September 1919, 17th September 1919, 29th October 1919 and 5th November 1919 are particularly important. The accusation against the plaintiff in the above case under section 323, Indian Penal Code, was that while Soma Mahar was being reprimanded by defendant's son Kashiram for having beaten plaintiff's son Shamrao, he was assaulted not only by Soma Mahar but also by the plaintiff, who is said to have kicked Kashiram. This kicking must have taken place some time before 4th July 1919 when the criminal proceedings were started against her. If she was then, carrying and her pregnancy was an advanced one of six, seven or even eight months, as some of the defendant's witnesses depose, it is absurd to say that she was, in spite of her delicate condition, in a position to give kicks and assault Kashiram. If the evidence be true that she was pregnant and, therefore, avoided attending the caste panchayat in June convened by defendant, Vithoba, and thus failed to convince her caste people that she was not then pregnant, it is not understood how, in spite of her pregnancy, she attended the hearings dated 8th August 1919 and 20th August 1919 when as the witnesses including Vithoba say that they could easily observe that her belly was enlarged meaning thereby that she was in an advanced state of pregnancy. The fact that she did attend Court and expose herself to public gaze two months later shows that she had no reason to conceal herself evidently because she was not then carrying.

Exhibit P-1 is the order of her discharge dated 23rd December 1919 for want of evidence, in the other criminal case which was started against her on 3rd November 1919 upon a Police challan under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. The challan which forms part of the record of the Criminal Case No. 36 of 1919 shows that the defendant Vithoba's information, as given to the Police on 12th September 1919 was that, owing to her having had illicit connection with Soma Mahar, she became pregnant and was consequently out-casted by the caste Panchayat convened by him at Chicholi at which she refused to attend, and that she was, therefore, all along on the look out for an opportunity to cause abortion, [to prevent which, he, as admitted by himself and his son Kashiram in the witness box, had posted one Baliram (D. W. No 10) to keep a watch over her movements and thus to make it impossible for her to have any such opportunity in the village], and that she was last seen with her big belly on the occasion of her appearance in the Balapur Court on 20th August 1919; but when she next appeared on 10th September 1919 in that Court, her belly had assumed normal proportions, thereby suggesting that she either caused abortion or gave birth to the illegitimate child and subsequently put an end to its life by drowning it in a well at Ridhora. It states that with a view to bring about this abortion or delivery and death of this illegitimate child she shifted to a house specially engaged at Akola sometime on 26th August 1919 and that it was sometime before 1st September 1919 that the abortion or delivery of the child took place, and further that on 1st September 1919 the child was discovered in the well at some distance from her residence at Akola.

It will thus be seen that it was on the definite information of Vithoba, which he gave to the Police in the presence of four other persons, whom he had taken with him to the Police Station in all probability to impress upon the Police Officer that his information was true and correct, that the Police Officer proceeded to start the prosecution against the plaintiff under Section 302, Indian Penal Code. The repeated assertion by Vithoba that the plaintiff was leading an immoral life, had illicit intercourse with Soma Mahar and had consequently become pregnant, but was on the look out for causing abortion and further that she either caused abortion or was delivered of the illegitimate child and that she killed it by drowning it in the well with the object of concealing her own intrigue and guilt, is the direct cause of the plaintiff's prosecution under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. Vithoba did not stop with merely giving information to the Police but he tried his best to substantiate the accusation by giving his own evidence in support of it, as Exhibit P-2, a copy of his deposition dated 12th November 1919 in the criminal case under section 302, Indian Penal Code, would show. A perusal of the deposition will clearly show the malice which actuated him and influenced his conduct throughout both before and after the prosecution. He had already exposed her by convening a village Panchayat, and it is very unlikely that having reported against her on 2nd June 1919, he would spare any pains for harassing her still further. The very fact that three different proceedings were commenced against her in three different Courts almost side by side, is a clear manifestation of a deliberate intention on his part to do every harm to her and also damage her reputation. He as well as his son Kashiram have both admitted that he attended at almost every hearing of the case under section 323, Indian Penal Code. This clearly proves the interest which he must naturally have taken in the successful termination of that prosecution. It is in evidence that he had financed that prosecution. This does not strike me as in any way unusual as the father and the son are still joint as the denial of it in the pleadings does. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code, started by Kashiram, was at the instance of Vithoba and that the latter actually aided and supported it in every possible way. In short Vithoba was interested in the result of that prosecution and could safely be said to be a prosecutor along with his son Kashiram though the complaint stood in the name of Kashiram alone.

As regards the question whether, in the prosecution under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, the real prosecutor was the defendant, Vithoba, or only the Crown, I must say that there is overwhelming evidence on the record to show that the real prosecutor was Vithoba, and that the real responsibility for it, therefore rested on him. The witnesses examined in the present case on behalf of the plaintiff, as also of the defendant, have given their depositions before the Judge, who decided the case. He had ample opportunities of noting their demeanour in the witness-box and also of forming his own opinion about their veracity and independence. His conclusions about the weight to be attached to their testimony cannot, therefore, be lightly set aside or ignored. He has preferred to believe the plaintiff and witnesses examined on her behalf, who impressed him as witnesses of truth, and has discarded the testimony of the defendant, Vithoba, his son Kashiram, and the other witnesses examined on his behalf as untrustworthy. I have myself read through the oral evidence and considered it carefully in the light of the surrounding circumstances and the probabilities of the case and have come to the conclusion that the lower Court's appreciation of the evidence on record is not, in any way, incorrect, but that it is fully justified. The documentary evidence, adduced in the case on behalf of the plaintiff, also clearly points to the conclusion that the defendant, Vithoba, was at the bottom of all mischief and that for every step taken in connection with either the plaintiff's excommunication from the caste, or her prosecution under section 323 or under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, or the application for her removal from the guardianship of the person and property of her minor son Shamrao, the defendant Vithoba was responsible. The orders passed in all the three cases are evidence of the facts that the proceedings terminated in favour of the plaintiff. They are not of themselves evidence of her innocence, but I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff has, satisfactorily, proved by other evidence the falsity of the accusation, which, the defendant Vithoba or his son Kashiram, laid at her doors. The medical certificate dated 19th September 1919 as also the testimony of several eye-witnesses, who had opportunities of seeing her at close distance on several occasions, amply corroborate her statement in the witness-box that she was not pregnant and did not give birth to any illegitimate child and that she was not, in any way, concerned with the killing of the child and that he acted maliciously towards her in starting the prosecution under section 302, Indian Penal Code. There is also ample corroboration for her assertion that she did not give any kicks to, or assault, Kashiram, as alleged by the defendant. The facts and the circumstances of the case point to the falsity of the charges with which the defendant accused her.

I think there is ample material on the record to prove her innocence. The fact that the defendant has not hesitated to bring forward in these civil suits suborned witnesses to support his false defence affords a clear proof of the long-standing malicious intention on his part, to do harm to the plaintiff, and to damage her reputation, and, to involve her in an expensive litigation. I do not think it will serve any useful purpose for me to re-produce here the evidence oral and documentary, which supports the findings of the lower Court on the point of (1) Vithoba being a real prosecutor in both the prosecutions and (2) of the said prosecutions being based on false averments and as such being started by malice and without any reasonable and probable cause.

I, therefore, uphold the findings of the lower Court on these points. I am further, of opinion that judging the evidence on record in the light of the tests laid down by the Privy Council the irresistible conclusion, to which I come, is that the defendant, Vithoba, had rendered himself responsible in damages, for the prosecution of the plaintiff, an innocent woman, and that he cannot escape his liability merely because the prosecutions under section 323 or under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code were not started in his name or had not technically been conducted by him in his own name. Great stress is laid before me upon the circumstance that his capacity of a Patel of the village compelled him to take the action he did and that there was ample justification for the same. I am not prepared to agree with him in this respect. His attitude, from the beginning to the end teeming as it is with malice, negatives the existence of all bona fides in his actions and I am constrained to say that he overstepped the proper limits in several ways.

I am not prepared to hold that the defendant was entitled to any privilege, either absolute or qualified, in the matter of either the complaint under section 323 or the prosecution under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. It is impossible for me to hold from the evidence on record that defendant honestly believed the truth of what he said or did or reported. My finding, therefore, is that the defendant, Vithoba, had absolutely no justification for starting any of the prosecutions against the plaintiff, and further that in connection with the prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code, both Kashiram and he are jointly liable in damages to the plaintiff, and in connection with the prosecution under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, he cannot escape his liability on the mere excuse that the Crown was the apparent prosecutor.

I will, next, deal with the question of damages to be awarded to the plaintiff. The lower Court has awarded compensation for the malicious prosecutions under the following heads—

No	Head	(1) For prosecution under section 302, I.P.C.	(2) For prosecution under section 323, I.P.C.
		Rs.	Rs.
1	Counsel's fee	1,100	550
2	Medical fee	32
3	Physical and mental worry	2,000	500
4	Loss of reputation	1,000
	Total	4,132	1,050

An award of all legitimate expenses, incurred by a successful accused person for his or her defence and for establishing his or her innocence in the criminal cases, is always justifiable, as those expenses are the direct and necessary consequence of the false and malicious prosecution. That Counsel's fees come under such legitimate expenses cannot be and has not been doubted. All that is said on the strength of the evidence of P. W. No 3 is that the plaintiff had not fully paid up what she had undertook to pay to her Counsel. The mere fact that the actual payment of a small portion is deferred ought not to make any difference, especially, as I have before me, clear evidence of the extent of her liability. Although Rs 1,100 are proved, I find the Judge has, in the ultimate calculation, taken the figure at Rs 1,000. I, therefore, uphold the award of Rs. 1,000 and Rs 550 under the first head. As regards Rs. 32 no attempt was made to challenge the payment. I allow it.

As regards Rs. 2,000 and Rs 500 awarded for physical and mental worry, all that is urged is that the amounts are excessive, looking to the duration of the two cases and to the fact that so far as the case under section 302, Indian Penal Code, is concerned, there was nothing in the hands of the prosecution to connect plaintiff with the dead body of the child, and it was only a walk over to get a discharge. I do not agree with the learned Pleader in this contention. I think the plaintiff's mind must necessarily have been exercised over this prosecution much more than over the other prosecution. The charge was very serious, and if proved by the suborned evidence would have put her out of her estate, if not, out of her very existence in this world. She was arrested on 31st October 1919, had to put up with the indignities of a Jail life from 31st October 1919, to 8th November 1919, when the Magistrate looking to her respectability, released her on a heavy bail of Rs 1,000. Since her arrest she had to appear in Court ten times. This must necessarily have caused her great personal discomfort although by the timely release on bail she was saved from the further disgrace of remaining in Jail, Police custody or of standing in the dock. I think, the damages awarded under this head in the case under section 302, Indian Penal Code, do not appear to be excessive. I, therefore, confirm the award of Rs 2,000. As regards the award of Rs 500 under the same count for the prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code, I find that there were 13 hearings out of which she attended 11 hearings. No doubt the offence was not serious but all the same it must have caused good deal of mental worry and physical trouble to her to attend the Court of the Honorary Magistrate. Taking into consideration the awkwardness of position, which a female accused would feel when made to appear and stand amid unusual surroundings, leaving her comfortable residence and the ease of life, she must have enjoyed there, I do not consider myself justified in disturbing the estimate made by a Judge of sufficient experience and standing. I, therefore, uphold the award of Rs. 500 also in the other case.

The only item left is of Rs. 1,000 awarded as damages for loss of reputation. This must always depend upon the respectability and the social position one enjoys in his or her own society. The Trial Judge, after taking into consideration of the relevant circumstances has thought fit to award Rs. 1,000 and has stated that it is quite fair. Nothing that has been said before me, induces me to think that it is either unfair or excessive. I, therefore, confirm this award also.

The result is that the appeals wholly fail and are dismissed with costs. Costs in the lower Courts will be paid as already ordered.

Messrs. S. K. Dar, Harnandan Prasad and N. P. Asthana, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The application before me is one presented on the 8th of September 1923, asking this Court to review an order of the 11th June 1923, according to which it was held that a certain suit pending before the Court had been wholly adjusted by a lawful agreement and it was ordered that a decree should be passed in the terms contained in a certain paragraph of an affidavit purporting to be sworn by the plaintiff in connection with the aforesaid agreement. The application, as presented to the Court, did not refer to any provision of the Code of Civil Procedure; but I have been informed in argument that it is intended to invoke either the inherent jurisdiction of this Court under section 151 of that Code, or the power of review given by O. XLVII, r. 1 of the same. When I set myself to specify the grounds upon which this application is made to me, I find it exceedingly difficult to compose any coherent summary of the 66 paragraphs of the affidavit which has been sworn in support of the application. The first 19 paragraphs are recitals of facts, some of which are apparent from the record before the Court and none of which have any bearing upon the question for determination, except in so far as they may be regarded as necessary to introduce or lead up to the allegations made in subsequent paragraphs. In the next four paragraphs it is merely asserted that the defendant, at a certain stage of the proceedings, communicated to the plaintiff a desire to enter into negotiations for a settlement of the suit. The six following paragraphs contain allegations, some of which are preferred in terms perhaps designedly vague, and certainly susceptible of more than one interpretation; but I can only understand these paragraphs as meaning that a certain petition of compromise and affidavit, which were presented to this Court on the 23rd of May 1922, were executed by the plaintiff without knowledge of their contents, and because he was in fear of his life at the hands of the defendant. The story is continued in the next few paragraphs, but they do not seem to me to contain any matters directly bearing on the question now before me until I come to the 42nd paragraph of the affidavit. It is now necessary to explain exactly what did take place in this Court. A petition of compromise, supported by affidavit, was presented to me on the 23rd of May 1923. I took up the matter in the presence of Counsel for both parties on the 25th of May. The important part of my order was that the application should be put up for disposal on the 11th June 1923, and that the plaintiff should then attend in person. On the 11th June the plaintiff did not attend in person, but was represented by Mr Sultan Ahmed, Advocate of the Patna High Court, a gentleman of the highest position in his profession, who was appearing in this Court by permission of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice. The record of the proceedings which followed shows that I was fully alive to the difficulties of the situation created by the failure of the plaintiff to comply with the order directing his personal attendance. I was assured by Mr. Sultan Ahmed that the order requiring the personal attendance of the plaintiff had reached the said plaintiff and that he, as Counsel for the plaintiff, had been instructed by the latter to ask the Court to excuse the non-attendance of the plaintiff in person and not to pass any further order insisting upon his personal attendance on a subsequent date. I also received from Mr. Sultan Ahmed, and accepted from him, his assurance that he had been instructed by the plaintiff personally to press the application of the 23rd of May 1923, that is to say, the application compromising the suit. I was also fully awake to the fact that this application amounted in substance to a withdrawal of the suit by the plaintiff and an abandonment by him of the claim which he had preferred against the defendant. I dealt with the matter on the basis of a petition of compromise tendered to the Court by Mr. Sultan Ahmed, under instructions from his client, on the 11th June 1923. I am, therefore, not concerned to enquire into the precise circumstances under which the petition was presented to this Court on the 23rd of May 1923, or the affidavit by which it was supported came to be sworn. I accepted Mr. Sultan Ahmed's assurance that his client had expressed to him a desire that he should represent him before the Court on the 11th of June 1923, that he should ask the Court to excuse the personal attendance of the said client and that he should ask the Court to dispose of the suit in the terms of the petition of compromise which had been laid before me, in the first instance, on May the 23rd, 1923. After considering the affidavit now laid before me I am of opinion that I was not only justified in accepting these assurances from Mr. Sultan Ahmed, but that I was bound to do so. In the face of these assurances, I disbelieve the statement made in paragraph 42 of the affidavit now before me. I take note that in paragraph 44 of the said affidavit the plaintiff does not say that he did not instruct Mr. Sultan Ahmed to do any one of the things which he now knows that Mr. Sultan Ahmed did it on his behalf on the 11th June 1923. What he says is that he represented to the said Counsel what he had been previously told to say by the defendant, and he asserts that he did this because he only saw Mr. Sultan Ahmed in the presence of the defendant and that the defendant had told him that he would come to serious grief if he failed to give Mr. Sultan Ahmed those instructions which he actually did give. The paragraph does not even assert that the plaintiff asked to be allowed to see Mr. Sultan Ahmed in private and without the presence of the defendant. To sum up the matter, it seems to me that the allegations in the affidavit before me are, in substance, that the plaintiff signed certain papers and swore a certain affidavit without knowing the contents of those papers or of the affidavit, at a certain place in Allahabad on the 23rd of May 1923, at a time when he was suffering wrongful confinement at the hands of the defendant and the servants or agents of the defendant and because he believed his life to be in danger at their hands if he refused to sign these papers and to swear this affidavit I have not examined the officer before whom the affidavit was sworn, but there are, in my opinion, considerations apparent enough on the materials now before me to justify me in declining to take any action upon these allegations. I have asked whether any report was ever made to the Police in Allahabad, or any complaint ever presented to a Magistrate of this place, in respect of the offences of wrongful confinement, criminal intimidation and extortion disclosed by paragraphs 25 to 31 of this affidavit, and I am informed that nothing of the sort was ever done. I have sufficient confidence in the official who certifies that the affidavit in question was solemnly affirmed before him to feel certain that he did not permit the plaintiff to affirm without first satisfying himself that the plaintiff was aware of the contents of the affidavit. Finally, I am of opinion that it is a question of minor or subsidiary importance to consider the circumstances under which this affidavit was sworn, or this petition presented to me on the 23rd of May 1923, seeing that my decision on the 11th June 1923 was wholly based upon the assurances given me by Mr. Sultan Ahmed.

For these reasons I am not of opinion that this is a case which calls for the exercise of any inherent powers which this Court may possess, in order to set aside the order of the 11th June 1923 or the decree which followed thereon. As a question of law, I am further of opinion that the provisions of O XLVII, r 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not warrant me in allowing this application on the basis of an application for review of judgment. The case is in my opinion, obviously distinguishable from that reported as Dalchand Shrivaram Marwadi v. Lotu Sakhamam Pardhi (1) (?). The Calcutta High Court has held that, where the attention of a Court is invited to the fact that some fraud has been practised upon a party in connection with a petition of compromise which has been accepted by a Court in which a suit was pending, that Court may apply the provisions of O XLVII, r 1 to set aside the order accepting the compromise, if satisfied that the alleged fraud has been practised. I cannot find any allegations of fraud in the affidavit before me. There are allegations which go far beyond the mere assertion that the plaintiff's assent to the compromise or withdrawal of his suit was obtained by undue influence. They are, as I have noted, assertions that the said compromise was obtained by the wrongful confinement of the plaintiff, by criminal intimidation and by extortion. Those assertions I distrust and I have given reasons for doing so sufficient to warrant me in taking no action upon the affidavit which contains them. Even in cases where fraud has been alleged, with that definiteness and fulness of specification which the law requires, the decisions of the Calcutta High Court which have been laid before me in argument, while asserting jurisdiction on the part of a Court to take up a petition like the one before me as a petition for review, on the strength of the words, "or for any other sufficient reason" in the aforesaid rule, express the opinion that the matter is one which should ordinarily be litigated in a separate suit. My own opinion is that the words, "or for any other sufficient reason," must be taken to refer to something ejusdem generis with the words that precede. My attention has been drawn to one case, not to be found in the authorised Law Reports, in which the Madras High Court held that a review of judgment could be granted in a case of fraud, where the circumstances were such that the Court could bring the case under the earlier provisions of O XLVII, r 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, by holding that the application for review was based upon the discovery of new and important matter. In so far as the affidavit laid before me in support of this application purports to refer to any new or important matter supposed to have come to the knowledge of the plaintiff since the 11th

GUNTAKA VENKATADRI v. BATULA SUBBAREDDI.

June 1923, I disbelieve any allegations to this effect, principally by reason of the confidence which I feel in accepting the assurances given me on that date by Mr. Sultan Ahmed. For these reasons I reject this application.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender.

A Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner and, by a voluntary act, efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. This voluntary self-effacement, sometimes referred to as a surrender and sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights may be effected by any process having that effect, provided there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, for the Respondent in both appeals.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants who are the alienees from the first defendant the widow of the deceased Rammana, are the appellants in these two connected second appeals. The plaintiff's suit is for the recovery of one half of the properties of his maternal grandfather, Venkatarreddi, on the ground that the compromise entered into in Original Suit No. 193 of 1888 by his mother as his guardian with the first defendant is unlawful and not binding on him. Venkatarreddi died in 1876 and his widow died in 1888. Their only daughter Appamma, the mother of the plaintiff, died in 1907, Appamma's elder son Rammanna died in 1887 leaving a widow Achamma, the present first defendant. In 1888 Achamma instituted a suit for the recovery of the properties of Venkatarreddi alleging that her husband Ramanna had been adopted by Venkatarreddi. The defendant in the suit was present plaintiff who was a minor represented by his mother Appamma as guardian. The suit ended in a compromise by which the present first defendant Achamma, the plaintiff in that suit, got half of the properties of Venkatarreddi and half of the ancestral properties of her husband, and the other half was allotted to the present plaintiff. It is this compromise that is attacked by the plaintiff as not binding on him.

The lower Appellate Court holding that the compromise does not amount to a bona fide settlement of doubtful claims and also that Appamma's conduct in connection with the compromise does not amount to a surrender of her life-estate, came to the conclusion that it was not valid and binding on the plaintiff and gave him a decree for possession of the properties. I agree with the Subordinate Judge as regards both the grounds on which his decision is based. I do not think that the case of adoption set up by the present first defendant in Original Suit No. 193 of 1888 was a strong one. One ground in support of it that is put forward was the transfer of patta to Ramanna's name in the mutation proceedings of 1881. It is to be observed that this transfer took place five years after the death of Venkatareddi and the adoption was not put forward as a ground for the transfer of pattas (See Exhibits III and IV series). Further, in some of these documents the transferee's name is described as Battula Ramanna, "Battula" being the name of Ramanna's natural family. Achamma described herself as the widow of Battula Ramanna. If Ramanna had been really adopted, he would have been referred to by the house name of Venkatareddi which was "Bommareddi." The only ground in support of the adoption that could have been put forward, so far as one could see from the materials on record, was the transfer of patta effected in the circumstances already mentioned. The case of adoption does not appear to have been so strong as to cause serious apprehension in the mind of the mother who was the guardian of the present plaintiff in that suit. I, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the compromise does not amount to a bona fide settlement of doubtful claims.

We have next to consider whether Appamma's conduct in connection with the compromise amounted to a surrender of her life-estate. As pointed out in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhunkdari Prashad Singh (1) it is no doubt true that "a Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, and by a voluntary act, efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died", and "this voluntary self-effacement, sometimes referred to as a surrender and sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights may be effected by any process having that effect, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property." Though there was no formal surrender by the widow of her estate in the case referred to, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council, there was an express agreement binding upon the widow that for considerations which appeared to be sufficient she would have abandoned the claim. It is to be noticed that in the case before us there is no act of surrender by the widow. The question is whether such a surrender can be inferred from the conduct in connection with the case. Appamma was not a party to the suit in her personal capacity as representing Venkatareddi's estate. The defendant in the suit was her minor son, the present plaintiff. She denied the adoption and contended that her elder son the deceased husband of the present first defendant acquired no interest in the properties of Venkatareddi, Venkatareddi's heirs being his widow, herself and her son. The suit was compromised and the plaintiff therein got one half of Venkatareddi's properties. I do not think that the inference made by the Subordinate Judge in the circumstances of the case that the conduct of Appamma in connection with the compromise cannot be considered to amount to a surrender on her life-estate is wrong.

I, therefore, dismiss these second appeals with costs.

56, 86, 230—Power of recording cesses—Assistant Record Officer, when can make record—Cess recorded by Settlement Officer, when recoverable—Sanction of settlement operations, whether sufficient

The power of recording cesses conferred on the Record Officer by section 56 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act can be exercised by the Assistant Record Officer under section 230, subject to the control of the Record Officer.

Where there is no revision of records notified by the Local Government as required by section 48 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act and no Record Officer has been appointed by it under section 49, the Assistant Record Officer has no authority to make any record such as would make a cess valid under the provisions of section 56 of the Act.

A mere sanction of a settlement operation of a district does not include a definite sanction as is required by section 86 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act for the preparation of a list of cesses in accordance with village custom.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Pilibhit, dated the 1st July 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant
Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from a decree passed by the District Judge of Pilibhit reversing a decree of the Munsif of that place. There are several connected appeals and this order will govern them all. The suit was filed in the Civil Court for the recovery of cesses by a zemindar from tenants. Every suit referred to a separate tenant. It was said that these cesses were customary dues payable by these agricultural tenants in addition to rent and that the zemindar was entitled to recover them under section 56 or 86 of the Land Revenue Act. The appellant's Counsel argued that cesses could be recovered only if they were held to be payable under those two sections and not otherwise, and his contention was that the cesses recorded by the Assistant Record Officer or Assistant Settlement Officer, Munshi Harbishan Dayal, did not comply with the provisions of either section. We shall examine the provisions of each section separately.

Taking up section 56 first—cesses which are payable by tenants on account of the occupation of land and other cesses shall be recorded by the Record Officer under the appellations by which they are known and no cesses not so recorded shall be recoverable in any Civil or Revenue Court. It was stated on behalf of the plaintiff that these cesses were recorded by the Assistant Record Officer Munshi Harbishan Dayal in the dasturdehi prepared under his supervision. The beginning of Chapter IV, relating to revision of maps and records, first lays down in section 48 that if the Local Government thinks that, in any District or other local area, a general or partial revision of the records, or a re-survey, or both, should be made, it shall publish a Notification to that effect. In the present case no such Notification was published by the Local Government. The powers of an Assistant Record Officer are defined in section 50. The appointment of an Assistant Record Officer is directed in section 49 which gives the Local Government the power to appoint a Record Officer and, as many Assistant Record Officers as it may seem fit. In the Tahsil of Pilibhit within which the lands held by the defendants, agricultural tenants, are situated no Record Officer was appointed in or about the year 1914. Munshi Harbishan Dayal was appointed as Assistant Record Officer. Under section 230 an Assistant Record Officer is granted all or any of the powers conferred by the Act on Record Officers subject to the control of the Record Officer. It is apparent that when no Record Officer was appointed the Assistant Record Officer cannot exercise any power conferred on the Record Officer. Section 56 grants the powers of recording cesses to a Record Officer only, and an Assistant Record Officer can exercise that power under section 230, subject to the control of the Record Officer. Under the circumstances two facts are wanting here. There was no revision of records notified by the Local Government and no Record Officer was appointed by it. Munshi Harbishan Dayal had, therefore, no authority to make any record such as would make a cess valid under the provisions of section 56 of the Land Revenue Act.

Next we turn to the provisions of section 86. Clause 1 of that section enacts that the list of all cesses other than those referred to in section 56 levied in accordance with village custom shall, if generally or specially sanctioned by the Local Government, be recorded by the Settlement Officer, and no cesses not so recorded shall be recoverable in any Civil or Revenue Court. Munshi Harbishan Dayal was appointed Assistant Settlement Officer, and there was also a Settlement Officer for the Tahsil of Pilibhit. There was also a Notification declaring this particular Tahsil to be under Settlement. The general or special sanction of the Local Government is, however, wanting in this case. The learned Counsel for the respondent argued that the general sanction of settlement operations included a general sanction of all these. We are not prepared to hold that the sanction of a settlement operation would include such a definite sanction as is required by section 86. In our opinion these cesses, if recorded by Munshi Harbishan Dayal as Assistant Settlement Officer with the powers of a Settlement Officer under section 231, were neither generally or specially sanctioned by the Local Government. The cess is, therefore, not recoverable under section 86 either.

A similar opinion to the one we are giving here was held by a Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 159 of 1917. In that case the provisions of section 86 only were considered. The relevant part of the judgment runs as follows:—

"We consider that it lay upon the plaintiff to show that the cesses he claimed had been generally or specially sanctioned by the Local Government. It is contended that inasmuch as these cesses were recorded in the Settlement they must have been taken to have been generally sanctioned. We cannot agree with this contention. We hold that no sanction was ever given as contemplated by section 86."

The position here is the same. The case to which we have referred related to land situated in Pargana Pilibhit as here.

In the result we decree this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs of all the Courts including Counsel's fees here on the higher scale. The objection by way of appeal requires no order as the appeal has been decreed.

The mere fact that a Vakil says he has no instructions, after he has appeared for the party at many hearings, does not mean that he withdraws from the undertaking in his Vakalatnama, unless it is so stated [p 1029, col 2]

Mr S. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.—I take the preliminary objection that the appeal is incompetent discussing the evidence and has, therefore, purported to proceed under O. XVII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, and not under r. 2. The petition itself was not, therefore, maintainable in the lower Court. The appellant must proceed by way of appeal against the decree itself and not apply to set aside the ex parte decree under r. 2. Vide Gundan v. Kamakha Rama Chetti (1), Viswanatha Asari v. Sami Asari (2) and Akula Bakkayya v. Aluri Venkatanarasimham, (3).

The mere fact that the Vakil who is in charge of the case reports "no instructions" when his application for adjournment is refused, does not amount to default of appearance.

As to whether the decision is one under O. XVII, r. 3 or r. 2, the cases are clear that it is one under O. XVII, r. 3, if the Vakil does, say "no instructions": Akula Bakkayya v. Aluri Venkatanarasimham (3), Gundan v. Kamakha Rama Chetti (1) and Viswanatha Asari v. Sami Asari (2). In fact Patinhare Tarkatt Rama Mannadi v. Vellur Krishnan Menon (4) lays down that the Court must proceed under section 158 of the Code of 1882.

The cases are also clear that the decision is one under O. XVII, r. 2, if the Vakil who applies for adjournment is one who appears only for asking for an adjournment Satish Chandra Mukerjee v. Ahara Prasad Mukerjee (5).

In this case the Vakil has appeared in a number of hearings in the case from the beginning. There have been 15 adjournments and it is the same Vakil who applied for adjournment. Under the circumstances his stating "no instructions" cannot amount to "non-appearance".

Mr. S. Krishnamurthi Iyer, for the Appellant—It is a case of no appearance, and the decree is an ex parte decree. Gundan v. Kamakha Rama Chetti (1) and Viswanatha Asari

v. Sami Asari (2) are not cases of the Vakil stating "no instructions". Majeti Nagaratnam v. Pachigolla Ramayya (6). The Court must proceed under O. XVII, r. 2. It is deemed to have proceeded under the section. Pratidhi Bhayankaram Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramulu (7) and Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (8).

The Court has to decide forthwith and on the materials then on record: Ram Krishun Lal v. Jatadhari Lal (9). It should not have taken evidence.

Mr. S. S. Ramachandra Iyer in reply:—Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer, (8) is a case which has come upon appeal from the decree itself. Akula Bakkayya v. Aluri Venkatanarasimham (3) is a case where the evidence was taken. "Forthwith" does not preclude the Court from taking evidence.

JUDGMENT.—The decree in Original Suit No. 138 of 1920 is one passed under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as is clear from the judgment. The mere fact that the Vakil said he had no instructions after he had appeared for the parties at many hearings does not mean that he withdraws from the undertaking in his vakalat unless it is so stated. We must, therefore, hold that there was an appearance and O. XVII, r. 3 applies.

Appellant ought, therefore, to have filed an appeal against the decree. Vide Patinhare Tarkatt Rama Mannadi v. Vellur Krishnan Menon (4) and Gundan v. Kamakha Rama Chetti (1). The filing of an application to set aside the decree, as if it had been made under O. IX, r. 13, was, therefore, wrong as also the appeal from the order thereon. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Baleshwar Prasad, for the Opposite Party

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision came before one of the learned Judges of this Court and he referred the case to a Bench of two Judges, being of opinion that there was somewhat of a conflict between two cases decided by this Court, viz:—

We shall consider whether there is really any conflict between the two cases or not in the course of this judgment. But it will be necessary to state the facts.

It appears that the applicant before us was a defendant in a suit for sale, he having been treated as a subsequent purchaser. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for sale on the 10th of December 1920. The decree that was framed was incorrect in so far as it ordered the payment of a larger sum than was really due on a proper calculation, of the amount payable according to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The applicant submitted to the decree although it ordered him to pay a sum larger than was really due under the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff was dissatisfied with the decree as he claimed a larger amount. He filed an appeal and the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal on the 12th of July 1921. A final decree for sale followed on the 6th of May 1922. On the 9th of March 1923 an execution of the final decree for sale was taken out by the plaintiff and the defendant-applicant paid up the amount for which the decree was executed and then made an application to the learned Subordinate Judge asking him to correct his decree. This application was made on the 21st of March 1923. The opposite party the plaintiff took objection to the hearing of this application on the ground that the Court of the District Judge was the only Court which could correct the decree if any correction was needed. The applicant thereupon made an application to the learned District Judge on the 21st of July 1923. On the 8th of September 1923 the learned Judge passed the order which is sought to be revised. He held that there ought to be some limit to a party's making an application for correction of a decree and he refused to grant the application although he thought that there was some error in the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge.

In this Court in the case of Balgobind Rai v. Sheoraj Rai (1) there was an application in revision against the order of a District Judge who amended a decree which he had affirmed in appeal and which was passed by a Munsif. In the circumstances of that case this Court held that, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to correct the error in the decree of the Munsif. It will be noticed that the decree of the Munsif had been passed under the old Code and the language employed by their Lordships who heard the application shows that they were considering the provisions of section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is true that section 206 of the old Code is not specifically mentioned, but the learned Judges used the following language:—

"It was necessary for the applicant to show not a variance between the judgment of the Munsif and the decree of the Munsif, but a variance between the judgment of the District Judge and the decree of the District Judge.

Clearly, therefore, they were not considering the language of section 152 of the present Code of the Civil Procedure. In the case of Sahdeo Gir v Deo Dutt Misir (2), already referred to, this Court had no hesitation in ordering the correction of a judgment and a decree of a Subordinate Court. There was, however, no appeal to any Appellate Court and this Court was concerned only with one decree and one judgment. In our opinion there is really no conflict between the two cases mentioned.

Coming to the present case, from the statement of facts already made, it would appear that the applicant has been guilty of laches to a very great extent. He did not examine the decree that was passed against him in the first instance. There was an appeal and he was a party to that appeal. He did not bring the fact to the notice of the Appellate Court that the decree of the Court below had been framed for a sum in excess of what was really due under the judgment of that Court. When the final decree was passed he did not bestir himself. When the decree was executed, he quietly paid up and then discovered that he had paid a sum larger than what was really due by him. Under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, there is no right in any party to have a clerical or arithmetical mistake corrected. The matter is left to the discretion of the Court and the discretion has to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case. In this case, the District Judge did exercise that discretion and was of opinion that, in view of the peculiar facts of the case, he should not correct the mistake which was after all for a sum which was about one-seventh of the total amount payable. We cannot say, sitting in revision, that the learned Judge failed to exercise his jurisdiction or that in the exercise of his jurisdiction he acted illegally or with material irregularity.

We, therefore, dismiss the application with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Mr. M. K. Hardas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case of the plaintiff who is a minor is that the kotha in suit is the ancestral property of his father and uncle. The latter let it out to the defendant, at a rental of 4 annas per mensem. There was a written lease and it expired on 9th April 1910, and the suit was filed on the 20th of April 1922.

The Courts below have found that the kotha in dispute belonged to the plaintiff's father and uncle, that it was leased to the defendant, who executed a rent-note Exhibit P-1 in favour of the plaintiff's father and uncle in 1319 Fash, and the defendant had continued in possession as a tenant on sufferance from 10th April 1919. The lower Appellate Court finds that Art. 139 of the Limitation Act bars the suit. It has, therefore, dismissed the case.

It is argued for the plaintiff-appellant here that as the tenancy was for a fixed period, the defendant on the expiration of the term held over as tenant at sufferance, i. e., one who comes in by right and holds over without right, and that time under Art. 139 does not run against the lessor until such tenancy at sufferance has been determined. That view of the law was laid down in Adimulam v. Pir Ravuthan (1), a case of 1885. But since that date the trend of authority is to the effect that where the tenancy is for a fixed term, and the tenant holds over for 12 years after termination of the tenancy (no new tenancy being created) the landlord is barred, and the tenant becomes the absolute and complete owner of the property: See Pusa Mal v. Makdum Baksh (2), Chandri v. Daji Bhai (3) and Bisheshwar Nath v. Kundan (4). It is unnecessary to quote further cases. The lower Appellate Court's view of the law governing the case is correct, and the suit has been rightly dismissed.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Appellant will pay respondent's costs.

JUDGMENT.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—The dispute in this appeal relates to fixed-rate tenancy belonging to Sumera, who died leaving a widow Musammat Partapi. The plaintiff claims to be the nearest heir of Sumera deceased. He denied that Musammat Partapi was lawfully married to Sumera; but the Courts below found on that point against him. The fixed-rate tenancy in question has been sold by Musammat Partapi to Harihar Prasad, for a consideration of Rs. 300 on the 4th July 1919, out of which only Rs. 50 have been found to have been taken for legal necessity.

The main question for consideration in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is the nearest reversionary heir of Sumera deceased, and as such entitled to impeach the validity of the sale. The Court of first instance found against him, but the lower Appellate Court held, relying on the pedigree proved in the case and on an admission of the contesting defendant himself in a previous suit, that the plaintiff was the nearest bandhu or reversionary heir of the deceased and entitled as such to protect his reversionary right.

It appears from the pedigree that the common ancestor of the plaintiff and Sumera deceased was Kashi, who had a son, Chikuri alias Hanuman, and a daughter Musammāt Budhia. Sumer was the son of Hanuman. The plaintiff is the son of Gangu, the son of Musammāt Budhia. There is no nearer kinsman, agnate or cognate, shown to be alive in the family. The rule as to the succession of bandhus, laid down in the Mitakshara, (Chapter II, section 6, paragraph 1) runs as follows:—

"On the failure of agnates, the cognates are heirs. Cognates are of three kinds, related to the person himself, to his father, or to his mother, as is declared by the following text.—

"The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his maternal uncle, must be considered as his cognate kindred. The sons of his father, paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt and the sons of his father's maternal uncle must be deemed his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt; and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred."

Here by reason of near affinity the cognate kindred of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them his father's cognate kindred, or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended.

The text above quoted is variously attributed to Vṛiddha Shatataṭap or to Baudhayana. It defines and illustrates the different classes of bandhus who are capable of inheriting. It was not cited by the author of the Mitakshara for the purpose of giving an exhaustive enumeration of the bandhus entitled to inherit, but only as an authority for or illustration of his proposition, that there were three classes of bandhus, namely atma bandhus or those related to the person himself, pitru bandhus or those related through his father, and matru bandhus or those related through his mother. Mitra Misra, the author of the Viramitrodaya, points out that the maternal uncle is recognized as an heir, but he is not mentioned there, and it would be anomalous, if his sons are included and he is not included. Balam Bhatta, a lady commentator on the Mitakshara, suggests that the words "sons" includes daughters, and that the sisters and their sons are not excluded.

In Girdhari Lal Roy v. The Government of Bengal (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council accordingly held that the enumeration of bandhus in the text is only illustrative and not exhaustive; and in Buddha Singh v. Lalru Singh (2) and Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (3) their Lordships declared that the word "sons" used there is used in a generic sense and includes a grandson.

Manu declares (IX, 387) that the inheritance of a deceased sapinda goes to the nearest of the sapindas. He does not mention bandhus specifically. But later writers have pointed out that bandhus are also sapindas, though of a different gotra. The sapinda relationship arises according to the Mitakshara between people who are connected by particles of one body; but as such a relationship might exist in some remote degree in a very wide circle, the author of the Mitakshara has discussed the limits within which such sapinda relationship exists in his dissertation on marriage, to which similar considerations are applicable.

HARIHAR PRASAD V. RAM DAUR.

Commenting on the text of Yagnyavalkya (I, 52-53), requiring that a man should marry a girl who is not his sapinda, that is within seven and five degrees from the father and mother respectively the author of the Mitakshara says:—

"She is called his sapinda who has (particles of) the body (of some ancestor, etc.) in common (with him). Non-sapinda means not his sapinda. Such a one (he should marry). The sapinda relationship arises between two people through their being connected by particles of one body. Thus the son stands in sapinda relationship to his father, because of particles of his father's body having entered (his). In like manner (stands the grandson in sapinda relationship) to his paternal grandfather and the rest, because through his father particles of his (grandfather's) body have entered (into his own). Just so (is the son a sapinda relation of) his mother, because particles of his mother's body have entered (into his). Likewise the grandson stands in sapinda relationship to his maternal grandfather and the rest through his mother. So also (is the nephew) a sapinda relation of his maternal aunts and uncles and the rest, because particles of the same body (the paternal grandfather) have entered (into his and theirs), likewise does he stand in (sapinda relationship) with paternal uncles and aunts and the rest. So also the wife and the husband (are sapinda relations to each other) because they together beget one body (the son). In like manner, brother's wives also (are sapinda relations to each other) because they produce one body (the son) with those (severally) who have sprung from one body. Therefore one ought to know that wherever the word "sapinda" is used, there exists (between the persons to whom it is applied) a connection with one body either immediately or by descent."

Vignyaneshvara then proceeds to refute the theory that the sapinda relationship with maternal relations rests on the connection arising from obsequial offerings, the exception as regards obitual impurity being otherwise explicable; and referring to the passage in the text "beyond the fifth and the seventh from the mother's side and the father's side respectively" he observes:—

"On the mother's side in the mother's line, after the fifth, on the father's side in the father's line, after the seventh (ancestor), the sapinda relationship ceases. These two latter words must be understood and, therefore, the word "sapinda," which on account of its (etymological) import, (connected by having in common) particles (of one body) would apply to all men, is restricted in its signification, just as the word pankaja (which etymologically means "growing in the mud" and therefore would apply to all plants growing in the mud, designates the lotus only) and the like, and thus the sixth descendant beginning with the son and one's self (counted) as the seventh (in each case) are sapinda relations."

The sapinda relationship thus ceases beyond the fifth ancestor from the mother's side and beyond the seventh from the father's side. The plaintiff is the fourth in descent from the common ancestor, namely the grandfather of Sumer, and as the nearest reversionary heir at the present time he is entitled to protect his reversionary right.

The learned Counsel for the appellant relies on the decision in Ramchandra Martand Warkar v Vinayak Venkatesh Kotheekar (4) but the general conclusion there arrived at after a close examination of the authorities was

- (a) that the sapinda relationship on which the heritable right of collaterals was founded ceased in the case of bhinna gotra sapindas with the fifth degree from the common ancestor; and
- (b) that in order to entitle a man to succeed to the inheritance of another he must be so related to the latter that they would be sapindas of each other.

But the common ancestor in the present instance was, Kashi and the plaintiff is only fourth in degree from him. In Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (3) the mother's sister's grandson was given preference to the son of the mother's paternal aunt; and the principle there laid down was that under the Mitakshara in preferring the nearer to the more remote class of bandhus, reliance was not to be placed on the individual propinquity or on the efficacy of offerings to a deceased person, but the rule was that a bandhu must, in order to be heritable in a female line, fall within the fifth degree from the common male ancestor and must be so related to the deceased person that they were mutually sapindas of one another, i. e., where the Mitakshara applies persons connected by particles of one body.

Within the agnatic circle, sapindaship is always mutual. But among cognates or bandhus the question of mutuality of sapinda relationship is by no means easy of solution, specially where several females intervene, unless the principle of religious benefit, which the Mitakshara seeks to exclude, is introduced. But as regards the grandson of the father's sister, there would be a common ancestor near enough to whom both he and the deceased, or one in the absence of the other, may have offered oblations, for Manu (IX, 186) says:—

"To three (ancestors) must water be given (at "their obsequies); for three is the funeral cake ordained. the fourth (in descent) is the giver (of these oblations); the fifth has no concern with them."

Professor Rajkumar Sarvadhikari, applying the principle of religious benefit as a test of mutuality treats the father's sister's grandson as within the heritable line (Sarvadhikari's Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 637). Mr. Golap Chandra Sircar excludes the principle of religious benefit and taking affinity by sapindaship according to the Mitakshara Law as necessarily mutual includes him within the heritable line (Shastri's Hindu Law 4th Edition, pages 74 and 294).

The cross-objection as regards the extent of the legal necessity is futile. The appeal and the cross-objection must, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by a person calling himself the next reversioner to the estate of one Sumer deceased to obtain a declaration that transfer of Sumer's property made by his wife Musammam Partapi to one Harihar Prasad was not made for legal necessity and is not binding to the reversioner for the time being on the death of Musammam Partapi.

The suit failed in the first instance, but it succeeded in the lower Appellate Court which found that the sale consideration was good and supported by legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 50.

The appeal is by the defendant and his contention is two-fold (1) the respondent, who claims as a bandhu, has failed to prove that there was no male agnate within fourteen degrees of Sumer living at the date of suit and the second is that under the Hindu Law the respondent is not a bandhu at all. The plaintiff-respondent Ram Daur has filed a cross-objection urging that no legal necessity had been established.

To take the last point first, it appears that on this point both the Courts were of the same opinion and they held that the sum of Rs. 50 having been borrowed originally by Sumer, his wife was justified in paying it off. This point, therefore, is decided against the plaintiff-respondent.

The first contention of the appellant has no weight. The learned District Judge finds that nobody has been able to even suggest that there is any closer relation than the plaintiff living. Indeed, in a former suit instituted by one Sheo Nandan, who is shown in the pedigree to be found in the plaintiff, the appellant pointed out the present plaintiff's father Gangu as nearer reversioner than Sheo Nandan. Both Sheo Nandan and Gangu claim through females and it is clear that if there had been a male agnate of Sumer living Gangu would not, have been pointed out as a nearer reversioner than Sheo Nandan.

On point No. 2, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff-respondent is a bandhu and is as such entitled to succeed to Sumer, if Musammatt Partapi should now die. Among the bandhus expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara is a father's sister's son. It has been held by the Privy Council in the case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (3) that the word "sons" in the text includes grandsons. Thus by an express text of the law the plaintiff Ram Daur is a bandhu of the deceased himself and as such is entitled to succeed. On behalf of the appellant we were pressed with the Privy Council case of Ram Chandra Martand Waiakar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (4). It was contended that their Lordships of the Privy Council had held that a bandhu in order to succeed must be within five degrees of the deceased counting both the deceased and the claimant. This contention, however, is not sound and the case is no authority for any such proposition. Where the claimant is related to the deceased through his father seven degrees have to be counted and not five. It is only when the claimant is connected with the deceased through his mother that five degrees have to be counted. This was held by this Court in the case of Shib Sahai v. Saraswati (5). In that case the claimant was 8th in degree and, therefore, lost his suit. The method of counting adopted in this case is open to objection. The counting is to be done from the common ancestor, as was held in the case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (3) by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Applying this test, the applicant is amply within five degrees from the common ancestor Kashi, and Sumer is well within seven degrees of the same person.

As for the test of mutuality, it also exists. For, I have already shown that Gangu the father of the claimant was the father's sister's son to the deceased and Sumer is Ram Daur's pitribandhu, being Gangu's maternal uncle's son.

(3) 30 Ind. Cas. 903; 13 A. L. J. 786; 37 A. 523.

Partapi, the transferor, has not been served with notice of the appeal, having been impleaded as a respondent. But this does not affect the appeal. I hold that the respondent was rightly successful.

I would dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objection.

By the Court.—The appeal and the cross-objection fail and are dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. The name of Musammatt Partapi who has not been served will be removed from the record.

The plaintiff then spent a great deal of time and money in trying to prove that the defendant was prevented from appearing by a sudden access of pain in the stomach, which was untrue to his knowledge and could not anyhow have justified the failure to appear. The bail was forfeited and Jodhraj sued the defendant for the fifty rupees and all the money he had spent in trying to avoid paying it.

He cannot, of course, recover the money he spent in trying to avoid his liability by proving a falsehood, and the fact that he claimed it and still urges his claim to it illustrates the extent to which untruth and perjury in a Court of Law are regarded as quite the normal and proper course for a litigant. In regard to the Rs. 50 it also seems beyond doubt that even an express agreement to indemnify him in that matter would be void under section 23 of the Contract Act, the object of it being of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code; an implied agreement to that effect would, of course, be equally void.

Sureties on a bail-bond are required in order that the failure of the principal to appear may be at the peril of others besides himself, and the whole object of that provision is defeated if the principal and surety are allowed to relieve the latter of the peril and confine it to the former by an arrangement among themselves. It is true that under section 513 of the Criminal Procedure Code the principal may in most cases be allowed by the Court to deposit a sum of money in lieu of executing a bond, and this appears to have been urged in some of the published cases on the point as an instance of the law allowing the indemnifying of the surety by the principal. But the permission granted under that section cancels the demand for sureties; the deposit of money by the principal is accepted in lieu of his bond with sureties, and there is no surety to be indemnified.

That such an agreement is void under section 23 of the Contract Act was the view taken, for reasons stated at length, by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab in Sunder Singh v. Kishen Chand (1) and more recently by the Bombay High Court in Laxmantal v. Mulshankar (2). Both judgments referred to that of the Allahabad High Court in Fateh Singh v. Sanwal Singh (3) in which the slight difference of the facts gives added force to the reasoning as applied to those of the present case. The application for revision is rejected and the applicant must pay all the costs, in which the Pleader's fee will be fifteen rupees.

JUDGMENT.—In a suit filed on foot of a mortgage effected by the appellants on the 13th May 1909 a preliminary decree for sale was passed on the 17th January 1918 which was made absolute on the 20th December 1919. The parties are members of an agricultural tribe.

When the decree was put under execution, an objection was filed by the judgment-debtors under section 16 of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act (U. P. Act II of 1903), saying that the mortgaged property could not be sold in execution of a decree. The Court upheld that objection. The decree-holder then asked the Court to take proceedings under section 9 of the said Act. That prayer was acceded to by the Court of first instance and the order of that Court was upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

The contention here is that no reference can be made under section 9 sub-section (3) of that Act after a decree has been made absolute. But that section contains no such limitation. All that it lays down is that if a suit is instituted in any Civil Court on a mortgage after the commencement of this Act by a member of an agricultural tribe, the Court shall, if it finds that the mortgage is enforceable, refer the case to the Collector with a view to the exercise of the power conferred by sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 9. This power can be exercised at any stage, i. e., either before a decree has been passed or made absolute, because under section 16 the decree in such a case cannot be enforced by the sale of the mortgaged property and must be left out of account, as if it had in effect never been passed. So long as the decree or mortgage subsists, the claim to recover the money or to enforce the mortgage also subsists; and a reference can be made to the Collector who can refuse or alter the terms of the mortgage so as to bring into accordance with the Act and make it conform to the limitation imposed thereby. The decision in Hannuman Prasad Norain Singh v. Harakh Narain (1) does not apply, because no reference under section 9 was there asked for. On the other hand the decision in Sheo Pragash Singh v. Radha Mohan Singh (A. S. No. 1457 of 1920) decided on the 18th July 1922 supports the conclusion that the claim can be referred to the Collector, though it had nominally matured into a decree which has been since found to be unenforceable.

The Appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

ORDER.

Hallifax, A. J. C.—The plaintiff-appellant Rupi Bai is one of the four widows of one Baji Rao. The defendants are the two sons of separated brothers of Baji Rao and also his other three widows. Rupji Bai sued for possession of a quarter of her husband's estate of which she alleged that the first two defendants had taken wrongful possession, impleading the other three widows as they refused to sue with her. The defendants pleaded that Baji Rao devised the whole of his estate by Will to his nephews, the first two defendants, subject to the payment of Rs. 90 every year to each of the four widows, each of them being declared entitled on default in the payment of her allowance to get possession of her share in the whole property. Rupji Bai contested this Will but it was held proved and her suit was dismissed. She now appeals on the sole ground that the estate included an absolute occupancy field of 107 acres, which cannot be devised by Will, and she is, therefore, entitled to her quarter share in at least that much of the property.

In addition to the 107 acres of absolute occupancy land the property consists of shares in four villages, 5076 acres of malik mukhuas land, 4195 acres of occupancy land and certain houses and moveable property. Rupji Bai is filing a second suit based entirely on the Will for possession of a quarter of the whole property or payment of Rs. 90 a year. The effect of the success of this appeal on the chances of success in that suit is not a matter to be discussed here. That there must be some such effect has been pointed out, but Rupji Bai after consideration has elected to press the appeal, and if the view taken in Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1) is good law her appeal must succeed.

In Ramchandra Balkrishna v. Ramchandra Jairam (2), decided on 21st February 1922, I expressed a doubt obiter as to the soundness of that ruling of Ismay, J. C., in view of the later ruling in Ragho v. Sadoo (3) and the words of section 5 of the Tenancy Act of 1920. In Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1) the right of an absolute occupancy tenant was treated as a tenancy with certain special rights added to it by the law, so that the holder could not have any right beyond the ordinary rights of a tenant, that was not given to him by the Tenancy Act, and that says nothing about a Will. The later view, expounded in Ragho v. Sadoo (3) and accepted by the Legislature, is that it is a proprietary right with certain restrictions imposed upon it by legislation. In that light the holder would have all the rights of a proprietor except those that were taken from him by the Tenancy Act, and the right to dispose of his property by Will is not so taken from him. Accordingly under section 9 of the O. P. Courts Act I refer for the decision of a Bench the question whether it is a correct statement of the law to say, as is said in Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1), that an absolute occupancy tenant is not empowered to bequeath any right in his holding.

A Bench consisting of Messrs. Kotval and Priedeaux, A. J. C.s delivered the following OPINION.—The question referred for our decision is whether it is a correct statement of law to say, as is said in Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1) that an absolute occupancy tenant is not empowered to bequeath any right to his holding.

In that case Sir Stanley Ismay, J. C., held that section 38, sub-section 1, of the Tenancy Act IX of 1883 did not permit an absolute occupancy tenant to Will away his holding. That Judge held that the word "transferable" of the sub-section did not in ordinary parlance include a power of devise. In Ragho v. Sadoo (3) at page 10* the learned Judge who decided that case writes:—

"It thus follows that so far as the origin of his right is concerned, an absolute occupancy tenant is in a position to claim perfect independence of his landlord, nay more, he can say to the landlord that he holds his own estate, subject to the condition that he respects his (the tenant's) right as created along with his own right by the same paramount authority, namely, the Crown, in whom all rights in land then resided and who had absolute power to distribute and regulate them in any manner thought expedient in the best interest of the country. Although then the Tenancy Act incorporates an absolute occupancy tenant within its sphere of operation and classes him as a tenant along with tenants properly so-called, yet in its essence his right is something quite apart from the rights of tenants proper. Mere inclusion in the Act does not subject him to the disabilities of tenants apart from what the Act specially provides for. Thus he is freed from all the disabilities ordinarily attaching to a tenant-right under the Act.

The Tenancy Act XI of 1898, section 41, (1) stated that the right of an absolute occupancy tenant in his holding shall on his death devolve as if it were land and shall be transferable subject to the conditions contained in the section. The power to devise is not one of them. Section 5 of the present Tenancy Act of 1920 states—

"The interest of an absolute occupancy tenant in his holding shall on his death pass by inheritance or survivorship in accordance with his personal law."

And, section 6 (1) states that he may transfer any right in his holding to a co-tenant or to any person who, if he survived the tenant without nearer heirs, would inherit his right. So it seems that it was possible for Baji Rao to alienate in favour of his nephews, for in the event of the death of the widows or their re-marriage they would inherit. But this Act also gives no express authority for an absolute occupancy tenant to leave his holding by a Will. Before us Tekchand v. Tulai (4) is quoted, a case that lays down that the right of an absolute occupancy tenant is a tenant right and not a proprietary right.

At page 42 of Seth Gangabishan v. Balmukund (5) Sir Henry Drake-Brockman gives an interesting history of the absolute occupancy tenancy. He shows that originally when the subject of occupancy rights was under discussion, the rights of 'absolute' occupancy tenants were considered to be beyond dispute. They were occupancy tenants with certain special privileges, and that for the purposes of the settlements in 1865 it was determined that any record of occupancy right based solely upon possession for twelve years should be made subject to any future alteration in the law, but that cultivators who could show special circumstances should be secured against any change in their position. That security was enforced by making all proprietors at settlement agree to respect all occupancy tenancies declared to be absolute and supplementary clauses were added to the wajab-ul-arz, the 6th clause running: "That the said ranyats shall have the power to transfer by sale, gift or Will their occupancy right, with all its privileges on payment to us of a sum equal to one year's rent for such land; provided that in every such case, the tenure shall be offered for sale in the first instance to us, at a sum amounting to five years' rent of such land, plus the full value without interest of all permanent improvement effected solely by the ranyat since the fixation of the rent, and shall not be sold to any other person unless we shall for the space of one month refuse or neglect to complete the purchase."

Thus it seems fairly clear that at the first Settlement it was contemplated to allow absolute occupancy tenant to devise these holdings, the power, however, being fettered by certain restrictions and we think there is force in the opinion of the learned Judge who decided the above case, that the Legislature intended when enacting and re-enacting section 38 of the Tenancy Act, 1883, to cut down not the landlords but the absolute occupancy tenant's rights which would include the right to devise. Section 38 of the Act of 1883 says nothing about the absolute occupancy tenant's power to devise, and sub-clause 7 of the section runs: "Any transfer made in contravention of the section shall be void against the landlord," an amendment effected by section 9 of Act XVII of 1889. There is an interesting history of this tenure given by the Hon'ble Mr. Dyer in Council when the Act of 1920 was being considered: see page 336 of the C. P. Gazette of December 1919. It is argued for the respondent that, unless the power to devise has been expressly taken away it remains; but we think that there is no force in the argument. Statutes interfering with vested rights have to be strictly construed, but we think it is clear from the successive Tenancy Act that the Legislature did not intend to continue the original power of devise, and that the absolute occupancy tenant has now lost that right. The case reported as Ragho v. Sadoo (3) does not deal with the question of the power of devise. It will appear from the remarks on page 11* of that case that in the absence of a specific provision allowing devise the tenant is like other tenants incapable of devising and that, wherever he is freed from disabilities of tenants he is so freed expressly. Under the old Act of 1859, the power to devise was subject to restrictions and if it were held now to exist it would be held free from those restrictions, which we do not think is contemplated.

The result is that we hold that the statement of the law in Anandi Bai v. Harilal Brahman (1) that an absolute occupancy tenant is not empowered to bequeath any right in his holding is correct.

Let the record be returned.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

Hallifax, A. J. C.—The opinion of the Bench is in favour of the appellant, to the effect that an absolute occupancy holding cannot be devised by Will, but the result of the other suit filed by the appellant has nullified the effect of this appeal. The possibility of this was indicated in the order referring the case for the opinion of a Bench. Her present claim is for a quarter share in an absolute occupancy holding of 10 1/2 acres, which is a claim as an heir to a quarter share in the whole estate left by Baji Rao for his widows to inherit, as all the rest passed to his nephews under his Will. In her other suit she has been given a decree for maintenance and the amount payable to her is made a charge on the whole estate of Baji Rao in the hands of his nephews.

It is obvious that she cannot both inherit the estate and have a charge for maintenance on it. The decree giving her maintenance and making it a charge on the whole estate, even the portion legally devised to others, is a decision that she cannot inherit any of it. Indeed it goes beyond the Will in other respects, as the Will directed that if her maintenance allowance were not paid she was to be given possession only of a four-anna share in one of the four villages in each of which Baji Rao had an eight-anna share in addition to a great deal of malk malkhuza and tenancy land and some houses. She has finally elected to keep her decree and abandon this appeal. It will be dismissed accordingly and the appellant must pay all the costs in both Courts.

In a suit by one co-owner for ejectment of a trespasser from the entire premises, the burden of proof lies on him to show that he had an unrestricted authority to eject him on the date of the suit. The mere fact that he had such authority at some point of time in the past is not sufficient to show that he continued to be clothed with that authority at the date of the suit, as to be alone entitled to call upon the defendant to vacate the entire premises, in spite of the fact that his other co-owner had manifested his intention to the contrary by granting him a fresh lease of the entire premises. JUDGMENT.—This judgment will govern both the above appeals. Second Appeal No. 207-B of 1923 arises out of Suit No. 198 of 1920, which relates to field Survey No. 58, and the southern half share of field Survey No. 85 of Mauza Mander Jahagir. These were released out by plaintiff, Vithal, to defendant, Sadashéo, Laxman for the year 1919-1920 for a makta of Rs. 36 under a kabuliyat dated 14th April 1919 which though taken in his name alone, was for the benefit of his separated co sharer Yeshwant Sadashéo also.

Second Appeal No. 208-B of 1923 relates to portions of fields Survey Nos. 38 and 55 of the same mouza leased to defendant, Mohanlal by plaintiff for one year 1919-20 on a makta of Rs. 62 as per kabuliyat dated 19th May 1919 which stands in the name of plaintiff and his co-sharer Yeshwant Sadashéo.

The defendant No. 1 in Suit No. 198 of 1920 as also the defendant No. 1 in the other Suit No. 201 of 1920 had agreed to vacate the lands respectively held by them without the necessity of a notice to vacate at the end of the year. None of them, however, vacated the land held by them. Plaintiff sent a notice to defendant Mohanlal through post on 21st December 1919, but the latter continued to cultivate the land against his will and in spite of his demand, during the year 1920-21; hence plaintiff brought this suit to eject him and also to recover one year's makta with interest from him. Sadashéo was not served with a similar notice; he continued to cultivate the land for the year 1920-21, presumably without obtaining plaintiff's consent thereto. Plaintiff has, therefore, sued him also for ejectment and for recovery of the makta with interest. Both these suits were instituted on 14th September 1920. The lesage in each case disputed the plaintiff's exclusive right to eject him, on the ground that he held under two lessees, i. e., plaintiff and defendant No. 2 and not under plaintiff alone and that plaintiff alone could not sue. The Court made Yeshwant Sadashéo a co-defendant in each of the two suits and thus made the two suits maintainable; but in spite of this the plea of the non-maintainability of the suit was pressed and it prevailed in both the suits. The defendant No. 1 in each case further urged that he had taken a fresh lease of the land in suit for the year 1920-21 from defendant No. 2 and had paid up the arrears of lease money to him and that he was not, therefore, liable for ejectment or for the lease money to plaintiff. The plaintiff maintained that he alone was the manager and had the right to lease out the land and also to collect the lease money from the tenants and that defendant No. 2 had no right to grant any lease which could bind him. Plaintiff's suit was, however, dismissed on the ground that he alone could not maintain ejectment. He, therefore, preferred appeals to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, and the latter Court remanded the cases for fresh decisions on the merits after holding that plaintiff was entitled to partial ejectment in any case unless the lease granted by the defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 be held, for any reason, to be binding on him. Against this order of remand there were miscellaneous second appeals in both the cases. Kotwal, Additional Judicial Commissioner, upheld the order of remand as correct as the following extract from his judgment will show:—

"So far as I understand the lower Appellate Court gives no finding on the facts of this case. All that it does is to point that the dismissal of the suit by the First Court on the mere ground that defendant No. 2 does not desire to eject the tenants is wrong and that the suits are maintainable for partial ejectment if Sadashéo and Mohanlal are tenants on sufferance, or for entire eject-ment if they are trespassers. Whether they are trespassers liable to be wholly ejected at the plaintiff's instance or tenant on sufferance liable to be partially ejected is left open for determination by the Trial Court after taking further pleas and deciding the issues thereon."

The appeals were accordingly dismissed.

After this, each of the cases was tried on the merits by the Munsif, who dismissed it on the ground that defendant No. 2 was the sole manager and he had the real authority to make and unmake tenants, and that he was right in accepting rent from defendant No. 1. Against these dismissals, the plaintiff appealed to the Additional District Judge, Amraoti. He set aside the dismissals and granted to the plaintiff a decree for joint possession of the fields covered by each suit to the extent of his half share therein. He held that plaintiff had tacit authority from defendant No. 2 to lease out the joint fields in 1919-1920, and that as defendant No. 2 admitted that the kabuliyat taken from defendant No. 1, in the two cases were taken at his instance, the mere fact that the kabuliyat taken from Sadasheo was written in the name of plaintiff alone and not of both plaintiff and defendant No. 2, as in the case of Mohanlal's kabuliyat, made no difference and that no importance could be attached to the accidental omission of defendant No. 2's name from it. It was further found that in view of the defendant No. 2's attitude and of his election not to eject the tenant, plaintiff could not claim to eject the defendant-lessee from the whole of the land comprized in each suit particularly as he could not be considered as a trespasser upon the land. The defendant No. 2's acceptance of rental arrears from, as also his act of leasing out of the fields to, the defendant No. 1, in each case, for the year 1920-21 before the date of the filing of the present suits by plaintiff, was treated by him as a clear revocation of plaintiff's authority to act on his behalf. In view of such an attitude on defendant No. 2's part it was held that plaintiff could assert his right to joint possession in respect of only his half interest in the joint property and could not claim to eject the tenants from the entire premises. The Additional District Judge also held that defendant No. 2 was entitled to realise the rents from the tenants and give them a discharge from further liability for the same. The plaintiff's claim for the rental arrears was, therefore, dismissed in each case. He has, therefore, come up in second appeal, and presses for a decree for ejectment of defendant No. 1 from the entire premises and for rental arrears. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in their turn, have filed cross-objections and they urge for the dismissal of the claims in their entirety.

In view of the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, I think, it is not open to the plaintiff-appellant to urge that at the date of the suit the defendant No. 1 was a pure trespasser liable to ejectment at his instance. According to the very terms of the lease dated 14th April 1919 in one case and dated 19th May 1919 in the other case the lease was to determine by efflux of time on the 31st March 1920. The relationship of landlord and tenant created for this specific term of one year (1919-20) was to come to an end, ipso facto, and the defendant was to be no longer under any obligation to cultivate the land on behalf of either the plaintiff or defendant No. 2. Moreover, it is not clearly stated in the kabuliyat that defendant No. 1 had undertaken to return the land to plaintiff alone, or that he had made any special contract with plaintiff to the exclusion of defendant No. 2 against taking a fresh lease from any one of them or without consulting the other. Under such circumstances, the original letting of the land to defendant No. 1, even if it be by plaintiff alone, must be deemed to have operated as a distinct demise for one year only by each of his own part, and a cross-confirmation of each for the part of the other, without any estoppel, so that the joint demise of the whole of the premises may affect the whole of the interest passing from each lessor. This, however, left each of the joint lessors the option of giving a fresh lease, or of giving due notice to quit, and also if he chose, to recover his several share in ejectment, and to put an end to the tenancy as to the whole so that the ejectment may be maintained, although the notice to quit may be given by one of the lessors only. The plaintiff had communicated his intention to turn the defendant Sadasheo out, by serving him with a notice, and defendant Mohanlal by filing the suit; and ordinarily this could have operated to put an end to the tenancy not only as regards the tenancy of his share but also as regards defendant No. 2's share. But in view of the attitude manifested by defendant No. 2, in his turn, in his conduct anterior to the institution of the suits, as found by the lower Appellate Court, I think that the tacit authority, which, according to the Additional District Judge, had vested in plaintiff to grant a lease in respect of the year 1919-20 on behalf of defendant No. 2 and of himself, must be deemed to have been, both expressly and impliedly, revoked, by defendant No. 2, so far as his interest was concerned, long prior to the suit. Each had, thus, revoked the authority of the other to act on his behalf in the matter of granting a fresh lease of, or of ejecting the lessees from, the entire premises. The burden of proving that the said authority was subsisting unrestricted in every way down to the date of the suit was on the plaintiff. But he has failed to discharge it. The mere fact, therefore, that he had such an authority at some point of time in the past, is not sufficient to show that he continued to be clothed with that authority at the date of the suit (14th September 1920) as to be alone entitled to call upon the defendant No. 1 to vacate the entire premises, in spite of the fact that his other co-owner (defendant No. 2) had clearly manifested his intention to the contrary by granting him a fresh lease of the entire premises. The fresh lease, however, could operate only on the lessor's half interest and was voidable as against the plaintiff. The principle underlying the case of Daryao Shah v. Tiran Shah (1) may, very fittingly, have applied to this case, but for the express and mutual revocation of each other's authority. See Ramji Patel Kunbi v. Syed Nur Mohammed (2).

Under these circumstances, I do not think, there is any room for interference with the decree passed for joint possession to the extent of plaintiff's half share and for substituting in its place a decree for complete ejectment as desired by the plaintiff-appellant, or for complete dismissal of the claim as desired by the defendants-respondents. The cross-objections also are equally unsustainable as the appeals, and for precisely the very same reasons. The appeals and the cross-objections, so far as they relate to the lands involved in each suit, therefore, fail. The claim for rental arrears has been rightly dismissed for the reasons given by the lower Appellate Court.

The result is that the appeals and the cross-objections are dismissed with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act effect—Will—Bequest in favour of unborn son of

SIVARAMA AYYAR V. GOPALAKRISHNA CHETTIAR.

effect of—Construction of Will—Bequest, whether valid—“Disposition,” meaning of.

A testator who died in 1877 by Will executed in English a few months before death gave certain property to his wife and daughter with rights of survivorship to each other. The Will further provided that if his daughter did not beget male issue in her lifetime, the property given to the wife and daughter was after their lives to go to his brother and his male heirs. If a male was born to the daughter, it was to inherit the real property given to them. A son was born to the daughter in 1881 but died after living for a day. The widow died in 1903 and the daughter in 1918. In a suit for possession by the sons of the testator's brother against the son-in-law of the testator who claimed the property as the heir of his deceased child.

Held, (1) that after the death of the testator's widow his daughter took an estate for life, [p 1048, col. 2.]

(2) that there was no intestacy of the remainder; [p. 1049, col. 1.]

(3) that the word “inherit” used in the Will did not indicate that the daughter's sons were intended to succeed as on an intestacy after the daughter's death; [p. 1047, col. 2, p. 1048, col. 1.]

(4) that the daughter's sons were intended to be devisees under the Will, and to take a contingent remainder, which would be converted into a vested remainder after the birth of the daughter's first son, subject to its diminution as the number of daughter's sons was augmented by further births, [p. 1049, col. 1.]

(5) that no child having been born to the daughter during the testator's lifetime, the disposition in favour of the daughter's son was, however, void, and there being no vesting of any estate in or after 1914 to be validated, the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act was inapplicable and the disposition was not validated thereby. [ibid].

Per Ramesam, J.—The Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act is not declaratory in the sense that it declares what the law always was. Still it is certainly intended to be retrospective. [p. 1049, col. 1.]

The words “come into operation in section 2 clause (2) of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act are intended to include all cases of vesting after the Act, though the testator died before the Act [p. 1049, col. 2.]

Shanmuga Devar v. Shanmuga Devar, 53 Ind. Cas. 202, referred to.

The Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act applies to all Wills made after it and to all Wills made before it, when the testators die after it. [ibid].

When the testator dies before the Act—

(a) If the vesting is after the Act and the legatee lives up to the termination of the preceding estate the Act applies. [p. 1049, col. 2, p. 1050, col. 1.]

(b) If the vesting is after the Act the Act will apply even though the legatee died before the termination of the preceding estate [p. 1050, col. 1.]

(c) If the vesting is before the Act, still the Act will apply if the devisee survives until after termination of the preceding estate [ibid].

(d) If the vesting is before the Act, and the devisee lives until after the Act, but may not or does not live until the termination of the preceding estate, the Act will apply to him and he will transmit the vested estate to his heirs [ibid].

(e) But when the vesting was before the Act and the devisee does not live up to the termination of the preceding estate nor even up to beyond the date of the passing of the Act so as to give an opportunity for the Act to operate upon his contingent and void estate and convert it to a vested and valid estate, the Act does not apply. [p. 1050, cols. 1 & 2.]

Periyanagi Ammal v. Ratna Velu Mudaliar, 76 Ind. Cas. 1042, 18 L. W. 625, 32 M. L. T. 137, (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 318, Kudopa Venkayamma v. Kakaria Narasamma, 35 Ind. Cas. 150, 40 M. 540, 31 M. L. All that the Act does is, that it validates certain dispositions which, but for it, would be void. But one has to stop its application when the application sought is not the mere validation of a disposition but involves the transmission by inheritance of the interest which never existed up to the time of the succession [p. 1050; col. 2.]

Per Jackson, J.—“Disposition” is a word of most general import and includes distribution. [p. 1051, col. 2.]

There is nothing in the language of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act to give it such comprehensive character as to make it applicable to every disposition in a Will executed before it [ibid].

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession

he plaintiffs claiming to be entitled, after the death of one Vembu Ammal, to the suit properties, of which a lease for seven years had been granted by her to the original sole defendant on 19th June 1918. The lessee pleaded that, under the Will of the last male owner, Cuppuswami Aiyar, Vembu Ammal's husband, Mr. T. V. Gopalswami Aiyar is entitled to the properties after her death, and not the plaintiffs. He also contended that the lease was binding on the remainderman. One of the issues originally framed was "Whether the suit is bad for the non-joinder of T. V. Gopalswami Aiyar as a party to it." The case was set down for preliminary argument on this issue and on 28th September 1920 T. V. Gopalswami Iyer was added as second defendant in the suit. The Subordinate Judge found on the 6th issue that the lease by Vembu Ammal was not within her competency to grant. On the 11th and 12th issues, he found that the second defendant (and not the plaintiffs) was entitled to the vested remainder in the suit properties after Vembu Ammal's death. He accordingly dismissed the suit. The first defendant filed an appeal against the finding on the 6th issue, but we are informed that he has since become an insolvent and his appeal has not been prosecuted. The present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiffs and in this appeal, neither party questions the correctness of the finding on the 6th issue.

The following pedigree shows the relationship of the parties.—

The last male owner of the suit properties was Cuppuswami Aiyar. He died in September 1877 leaving his daughter Vembu Ammal. His last Will—about the genuineness of which there is no question—is dated 24th July 1876. He was a Pleader of the Tanjore District Court. The Will is in English. His widow died in 1903 and the daughter in 1918.

Two questions arise in appeal—(1) What is the proper construction of the Will? (2) If the construction is, as contended by the respondent, is the disposition validated by Madras Act of 1914? The Will (Exhibit A) provides that the lands should be managed by his brother and half the income should be enjoyed by him, in his own right. He gave also one house to his brother. Another house and the other half of his lands were given to the wife and daughter with the right of survivorship to each other, i. e., wife and daughter. Lower down he provides, "If my daughter does not beget male issue in her lifetime half the land and the house given to my wife and daughter by this Will shall after their lives go to my brother and his male heirs. If a male is born to my daughter, it will inherit the real property given to my wife and daughter."

The Will provides for an estate during the joint lives of the wife and daughter, to be taken by them as tenants-in-common with a remainder in favour of each for her life after the death of the other. In the events that happened, after the death of the widow in 1903, the daughter took the estate and it is conceded by both parties that it was an estate for her life. The question is.—Did the Will dispose of the remainder after the daughter's life estate? If so what is the effect of the disposition? The respondent's contention is that the Will gave a contingent remainder to the daughter's sons—the contingency being, the coming into existence of the daughter's son. He accordingly argues that, when a son was born in 1881, the contingent remainder was converted into a vested remainder when the boy died after living for a day; that it was then inherited by his mother who took the limited estate of a Hindu mother in it, and, after her, it was inherited by the second defendant in 1918. It may be observed here, that, at this stage we are concerned only with the construction of the Will and not with the validity of such a disposition as is contended for by the respondent.

Mr. Varadachari, for the appellants, argues that the testator did not intend to make any disposition under the Will in favour of the daughter's sons but intended that the Hindu Law of inheritance should operate in favour of the daughter's sons. When the daughter died in 1918, the daughter's sons, if any, would have taken it but as only one was born and even he did not survive upto 1918 the plaintiffs took the estate. In support of this argument, he lays special emphasis on the word 'inherit' which he argues is not the same as 'take.' He also contends that the word 'beget male issue in her lifetime' should be construed as 'have male issue surviving her.' He relies on Srinivasa v. Dandayudapani (1), the Will in which is somewhat similar. But as the Subordinate Judge points out, there is no disposition in favour of the daughter's son in the last case. The only bequest was in favour of the daughter who was to transmit the corpus intact to her male descendants. The words 'male descendants' were held not to be words of purchase. Wilkinson, J., construed them to be words of inheritance while Shepherd, J., thought that the daughter got a daughter's estate and there was an intestacy after her death, leaving the Hindu Law to take effect.

This case does not, therefore, help us. He also refers to Gurusami Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (2) where it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee (at page 358) that "the words 'have issue' are often read as meaning 'leave issue,' but not without some reason derivable from the Will." I may at once say the appellant's contention about the construction of the expression "beget male issue in her lifetime" is only another way of stating his contention about the construction of the second sentence in the clause. If the second sentence can be construed, as he contends for, as a disposition in favour of only daughter's sons who survive Vembu Ammal or as providing for the succession of the daughter's son, as on an intestacy, in either case, the plaintiffs get the property. It is immaterial what the first sentence in the clause means as, either under the Will (if 'beget male issue' means leaving male issue surviving her) or otherwise, the plaintiffs are entitled. Thus, the construction of the first sentence need not detain us. It is the second sentence that has to be considered.

The question is,—Does the word 'inherit' indicate that the daughter's sons were intended to succeed, as on an intestacy, after the daughter's death. In Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kalicharan Singh (3) similar contention was raised as to the Bengali words "Uttaradhikara Sutra" translated as "by rights of inheritance" and negated by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The Chief Justice who decided the case in the High Court of Calcutta [Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kalicharan Singh (4)] explained the expression as "after-takers" and Lord Macnaghten concurred with it. In Watkins v. Fredrick (5) Lord Westbury was of opinion that the words "to inherit" are used by the testator as equivalent simply to the word 'to take.'

In Chunilal v. Bai Muli (6) the daughter was described as 'heir' in three places. Yet it was held that the Will contained a disposition in favour of the daughter and the intention was not that she should succeed as heir. She predeceased the mother. In Harris v. Brown (7), the words "descend to the eldest son" were said to be the same as "devolve or go" and it was held that the eldest son took under the Will. In Moulvi Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewdkram (8), their Lordships say "The testator uses the word 'heir' as signifying the person who is to take immediately in succession to another." On the whole I am inclined to agree with the respondent's contention that the daughter's sons were intended to be devisees under the Will and not to succeed as on an intestacy.

Mr. Varadachari next argues that the daughter's sons were intended to take only if they were born before the testator's death. He refers to Mann v. Thompson (9) and Dias v. De Livera (10), quoted by Lord Macnaghten in Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kalicharan Singh (3). I have no hesitation in rejecting this contention. Assuming such a rule gives effect to the intention of Hindu testators also (cf. the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, section 2) the exception to the rule, recognised in English Law and Indian Succession Act, section 99, extended by Hindu Wills Act to Bengal should be applied to Hindu Wills also as expressing a rule of common sense, giving effect to intentions of testators in favour of persons described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual "when the possession is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator, by reason of a previous bequest." Even in Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kalicharan Singh (3) the rule was not actually applied in ascertaining the intentions of the testator. The consideration that the well-known doctrine of Hindu Law (laid down in the *Tagore case) that a gift to an object not in existence is absolutely void—a consideration that must have been known to the testator in the present case also—did not prevent the application of the exception to ascertain the intention in that case. It is true that in that case, the disposition failed as to those born after the testator's death on account of the rule of Hindu Law governing a gift to persons not in existence at the time of the testator's death but it took effect as to those in existence at the testator's death, the rule in Leake v. Robinson (11), not being applicable. I may also add that in this Presidency, the rule in Mann v. Thompson (9) was not applied in Kudopa Venkayamma v. Kakarla Narsamma (12).

The next alternative contention of Mr. Varadachari is—even if the daughter's sons were intended to take under the Will, they take only if they survive the daughter and do not take a vested estate immediately after birth. He points out that if the first son of the daughter takes a vested estate as soon as he was born other sons of the daughter would be deprived of all benefits under the Will a result not intended by the testator, unless the somewhat complicated construction is adopted that as a second or third son is born, the earlier born sons would be divested pro tanto so, as to give the last born an equal share with the others. This complicated construction is the one suggested by the respondent and adopted by this High Court in Kudopa Venkayamma v. Kakarla Narsamma (12). The principle that a contingent estate becomes converted into a vested estate as soon as the contingency happens is not a principle peculiar to the English Law or to the Indian Succession Act (section 107). In Hickling v. Fair (13) Lord Davey says: "It is an elementary principle in the construction of Wills that a gift to a class after a life interest or life-rent includes all persons within the description of the class who were alive at the testator's death or have come into being during the lifetime of the life-tenant or life-renter."

SIVARAMA AIYAR v. GOPALAKRISHNA CHETTIAR.

That principle is common to Scotland and England, and is applicable, I should suppose, wherever the English language is used." The Indian Legislature thought fit to extend it to Bengal Hindus. The better principle is to permit the vesting at the earliest possible moment consistent with the language of the testator i.e., immediately after the person named comes into being, unless there are express words postponing the vesting till after the termination of the preceding life-estate. (See also Jarman on Wills, Volume II, p. 1667, Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 28, page 716, section 1339.)

I, therefore, agree with the respondent's contention that the Will should be construed as giving a contingent remainder to the daughter's sons, such contingent remainder being converted into a vested remainder after the birth of the first daughter's son, subject to its diminution as the number of daughter's sons is augmented by further births.

The next question is, What is the effect of this disposition? As the law stood upto 1914, the disposition is void by the rule in the Tagore case, as no child was born during the testator's life-time. No estate vested in the child born in 1881 as he died immediately. He did not transmit any estate to his heirs.

Does the Madras Act I of 1914 (commonly known as Seshagiri Aiyar's Act) make any difference? In my opinion it does not.

The Act is not declaratory in the sense that it declares what the law always was. Still, it is certainly intended to be retrospective. The extent to which it can be used retrospectively is indicated in section 2 (2) and in various decisions of this Court [Koudopu Venkayamma v. Kakari, Narasamma, (12), Muthuswami Ayyar v. Kalyani Ammal (14), Shanmuga Devar v. Shanmuga Devar (15), and Perianayagi Ammal v. Ratnavelu Mudaliar (16)] the Act has been used retrospectively. The actual decision in these cases does not help the respondent who wants the principle of these cases to be extended.

The argument on the Act centred on the meaning of the expression "come into operation." The appellant contends that it is synonymous with 'rest.' The respondent points out such a construction excludes cases obviously with the intention of the Act e.g., cases when a vested remainder becomes vested before the Act but the actual enjoyment is to begin after the Act. He also relies on the contrast between the words "come into operation" and "vested" in the clause (2). To this last argument, the appellant replies that the words "vest" and "operate" are used somewhat indiscriminately in the Act and refers us to the other sections. This is true; and yet I do not agree with the appellant's contention that the term of vesting is all that was intended. Nor am I able to agree with the respondent's contention that the words were intended to denote only the term of distribution. In my opinion, the words "come into operation" are intended to include all cases of vesting after the Act though the testator died before the Act. [See Shanmuga Devar v. Shanmuga Devar (15) where Seshagiri Aiyar, J., uses the words 'final vesting'—a case of transfer.] But, in cases where the vesting may happen before the Act on a proper construction of the Will, the Act will further help the devisee named if he survives until after the termination of the preceding estate, so as to be able to take actual possession of the property. But for the application of the second principle, he himself must survive. An analysis of the possible cases may serve to clear my view on the application of the Act.

(1) The Act applies to all Wills made after it and to all Wills made before it, when the testators die after it. This is an obvious case.

(2) When the testator dies before the Act:—

(a) If the vesting is after the Act and the legatee lives upto the termination of the preceding estate the Act applies. This also is an obvious case.

(b) If the vesting is after the Act the Act will apply even though the legatee died before the termination of the preceding estate. e.g., a testator died in 1877 giving a life-estate to his daughter and remainder to his daughter's sons. A son is born in 1915 but dies before the daughter who lives upto 1918. The remainder becomes vested in the son at his birth and when he dies it goes to his heirs. [Periana-yagi Ammal v. Ratnavelu Mudaliar (16) is an example] [Muthuswami Ayyar v. Kalyani Ammal (14) is an example of a declaratory suit before the death of the life-tenant].

(c) If the vesting is before the Act, still the Act will apply if the devisee survives until after the termination of the preceding estate e. g., in the last illustration, if a son was born in 1881 and survives his mother, he takes the estate. This case will be excluded from the operation of the Act if the appellant's contention is accepted. The further transmission of the estate to the devisee's heir is an obvious result.

(d) I would even concede a further case. If the vesting is before the Act and the devisee lives until after the Act, but may not or does not live until the termination of the preceding estate, the Act will apply to him and he will transmit the vested estate to his heirs.

In this case, the proper construction of the Will involves a vesting before the Act. The disposition is void by reason of the Tagore case; if the devisee lives beyond 1914, the void vesting will be converted into a valid vesting by reason of the Act. The estate having vested, descends to the heirs of the devisee [Muthuswami Ayyar v. Kalyani Ammal (14) is an example].

(e) This is the last case that can happen and it is the present case. When the vesting was before the Act and the devisee does not live upto the termination of the preceding estate nor even upto beyond the date of the passing of the Act so as to give an opportunity for the Act to operate upon his contingent and void estate and convert into a vested and valid estate; the Act does not apply. In such a case, the devisee took no estate and transmitted no estate—a result which is a bare statement of actual facts and does not involve any legal subtlety. To hold the opposite and to say that the Act applies to this case also is to say that an estate which never vested and which, therefore, never existed (not even as a contingent estate—being void) descended by inheritance to the heir of the person who was intended to have it but never had it—a fiction for which there is no warrant in the language of the Act and to give effect to which would be unparalleled in the annals of legislation. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar points out to the fact that, in cases (a), (b) and (d) (when the vesting happens at a time different from the falling into possession) the estate will be transmitted to the heirs of the devisee. This is true but this is not because of the Act, but because the interest of the devisee was vested in him before his death. What interests descend by inheritance is a matter depending on general principles of law. The Act has nothing to do with it. All that it does is it validates certain dispositions which, but for it, would be void. But one has to stop its application when the application sought is not the mere validation of a disposition but involves the transmission by inheritance of the interest which never existed upto the time of the succession. Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar argues that the effect of section 2 (2) is, as if the Act existed prior to 1881, if not before 1877. I cannot accept this construction of the Act, as it involves, in my opinion, fictitious devolution.

Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar refers to Jarman, Volume II, p. 1353, to show that contingent remainders may descend. According to the passage cited, they descend only when the contingency is a collateral event not relating to the devisee, but the principle is inapplicable when the contingency is the passing of an Act validating the disposition and the devisee surviving, at least, after the passing of the Act. The real answer to the argument is that, there is not even a contingent interest, for contingent interest means a valid contingent interest not a void contingent interest.

I, therefore, differ from the Subordinate Judge on the application of Act I of 1914, allow the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' suit. In appeal, the second defendant will pay their costs. In the Court below, both the defendants will be liable for their costs. The first defendant will be liable for the mesne profits from 17th August 1918 upto the date of the suit, and for the mesne profits subsequent to the suit. The Court below will ascertain the mesne profits upto the date of the suit and then pass a final decree. The mesne profits subsequent to suit will be determined in execution. The Subordinate Court of Kumbakonam will take up the point reserved and pass the final decree.

The memorandum of objections by first defendant is dismissed with costs.

Jackson, J.—I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's judgment, and have arrived at the same conclusion though by a different route. Two circumstances lead me to interpret the Will, Exhibit A, as making the male born to the testator's daughter heir to the real property given to his wife and daughter after their death and, without any intention that the property should vest in him at birth and come to him by survivorship. In the first place the testator having deliberately chosen to write his Will in English may I think he presumed to have intended that the words employed should bear their commonly accepted connotation. In the second place it will be found that the Will originally ran "If my daughter does not beget male issue in her lifetime half the land and the house given to my wife and daughter by this Will shall after their lives go to my brother and his male heirs My earring etc." This left it to be presumed what should happen if his daughter did have male issue, and no doubt the testator on reading over his Will, saw that it should not be a mere matter of presumption. So he inserted in smaller script, "If a male is born to my daughter it will inherit the real property given to my wife and daughter", which I take to mean 'the property shall after their lives go to her male issue' merely expanding the previous sentence, whereas if he had intended that property should vest in her male issue from birth, the testator would have made it clear in a separate clause.

If, however, the alternative and, of course, perfectly reasonable construction is adopted, so that the property vested in the male issue from the moment of birth, it remains to be considered how far this Will can be validated by the retrospective effect of Act I of 1914. The Will is dated 1876. The testator died in 1877. A son was born to the daughter in 1881. The testator's widow died in 1903, his daughter in 1918. Therefore, the Will was executed before Act I of 1914; but the provisions of the Act apply to such of the dispositions made in it as were intended to come into operation at a time subsequent to the passing of the Act [Section 2 (2) Act I of 1914]. It is argued for the appellants that "dispositions" can refer only to the vesting under the Will, and inasmuch as the vesting on the birth of the son in 1881 was null and void, there is no disposition to be considered which can be said to have been intended to come into operation after 1914. For the respondents on the other hand it is argued that "dispositions" include distribution, and the provisions of the Act apply to the distribution in 1918 on the death of the daughter. It is further argued that inasmuch as the Act applies to this disposition it must be held to apply to every disposition in the Will; in other words the Will must be read in the light of Act I of 1914 from the date of its execution, because one of its dispositions has come into operation after the passing of that Act. I find nothing in the language of section 2 to give it this comprehensive character, and am sure that if that had been the intention of the Legislature it both could and would have expressed it in plainer terms.

I agree, however, that disposition which is a word of most general import includes distribution, and what we have to consider is the effect of the Act on each disposition as that disposition come into operation. The 'vesting' should have come into operation in 1881 when the son was born, but obviously the Act could have no bearing at this date, and this disposition was void. The next disposition is the death of the widow in 1903 with which the Act has nothing to do. Then in 1918 the daughter dies and under the Will as now interpreted if there is a son vested with the estate he as survivor succeeds to its enjoyment. But there is no such son, and, therefore, at this point of time there is no one to inherit under the Will. I do not think the death of the son soon after his birth in 1881 and at any rate before 1914 affects the question. Under the Will a male already vested with the estate must succeed the last life-holder. The son was certainly not vested in 1881 for that disposition was not intended to come into operation, and obviously did not come into operation after 1914 and is, therefore, void. When then was he vested (supposing him to have survived)? Not in 1914. The Act itself cannot be regarded as a disposition vesting all the heirs who had failed to become vested previously owing to the Tdgore case. And not, in my opinion, in 1918. The death of the mother could not vest the estate in her son. Of course he might inherit in the ordinary sense of the term but that brings us back to the alternative construction of the Will. If the Will is to be construed as allowing the male already vested to take the property as survivor on the decease of the life-holder, one can only say that no male was so vested in 1918. Because that disposition of the Will i.e., the vesting on the date of birth, had become operative before the passing of the Act and, therefore, entirely null and void. There was no other vesting disposition which could or did occur. The only other disposition to come into operation was the distribution, and when that occurred there was no one with a vested title who could succeed. Of course the accident of the son's death simplifies the problem, but I agree with Mr. Varadachariar that the solution would be the same if he survived. It might be an extremely hard case if he did survive; but no hardship would arise in the present case if on my construction the Will was taken as giving him the succession by right of inheritance in the ordinary English sense.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 318 of 1915, dated the 13th May 1921

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. G. Hatwalne, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by one Trimbakrao for recovery of possession of certain property to which he laid claim as a son duly adopted to the last male holder, Rustumrao, by his widow, Laxmi, defendant No. 1, on 3rd July 1913. He died during the pendency of the suit and in his place his widow, Chandrabhaga, was brought on record as his legal representative. Chandrabhaga also adopted a son and her place has been taken by the adopted son Venkatrao. The defendants to the suit were Laxmi the widow of Rustumrao (defendant No. 1), Yelhai the widow of Rustumrao's brother Yeshwantrao (defendant No. 2), Ajani the mother of Rustumrao (defendant No. 3), Bajai the sister of Rustumrao (defendant No. 4), Laxman and Champatrao the husband and son of Bajai (defendants Nos. 5 and 6) and two more persons Maroti and the firm of Surajmal Jagannath Marwari (defendants Nos. 7 and 8) as transferees from Ajani defendant No. 3. The original plaintiff's adoption was challenged and his right of suit denied by all the defendants with the result that his claim was dismissed, against all the defendants except Laxmi defendant No. 1 by the first two Courts, but the dismissal was set aside by this Court in Second Appeal No. 423-B of 1917 on 26th April 1920 and the case was remanded for decision of the other points which had been left undecided in the first appeal. On remand the case came on for hearing before Mr. M. R. Pathak the Second Additional District Judge, Akola. During the pendency of that appeal Ajani (defendant No. 3) died and on her name being struck out, Bajai and her husband and son and the other defendants were renumbered as defendants Nos. 4 to 7 as Lalchand son of Surajmal and his son Poonamchand, were owners of the firm of Surajmal Jagannath, their names were shown as defendants Nos. 7 and 8. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Champatrao were represented by Pleaders at some stages of the appeal but the other respondents particularly respondents, Bajai, Lalchand and Poonamchand do not appear to have taken care to attend at the hearing of the appeal. Respondent Champat's Pleader was Mr. Rajwade. Plaintiff had applied for amendment of her plaint on 23rd December 1915 for including in it a prayer for possession of one-third share of Survey No. 71, one-fourth share of Survey No. 1 of Mouza Warwant from which after the death of the original plaintiff Trimbak his widow was forcibly dispossessed by defendants Ajani and Champatrao (defendants Nos. 3 and 6), but it remained unnoticed when the appeal was disposed of by Mr. R. V. Paranjpe. It was revived before Mr.

M. R. Pathak and was granted in spite of the opposition of Champatrao (defendant No. 6) and the amendment allowed.

The special defence raised by defendants Yelhai (defendant No. 2), Ajani (defendant No. 3), Bajai and her husband and son (defendants Nos. 4 to 6) and Surajmal and Poonamchand (defendants Nos. 7 and 8) which was also adjudicated upon in the first Court by Mr. A. S. Sathe, Sub-Judge, before remand, adversely to their respective contentions, was not reiterated or pressed in the appeal at the stage when it came on for hearing before Mr. Pathak after remand, as those respondents either remained absent or did not press for maintaining the dismissal of the claim as against them. Thus the points, which the Additional District Judge thought he was called upon to dispose of by his judgment, were narrowed down. This state of things led the Additional District Judge to think that "on the merits of the case there are no other points involved which call for fresh decision." The Court, therefore, passed a decree against the defendants declaring the adoption of Trimbakrao to be valid, and held that his legal representative was entitled to be put in possession of the property in suit subject to the right of residence of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 Yelhai and Ajani in the padhi and in the house below it for their respective lives.

Amongst the findings recorded by Mr. Achyutrao Sathe in his elaborate judgment dated 10th November 1914, there was a finding on issue No. 8 which dealt with the rights of the defendants Nos. 7 and 8 on the basis of a mortgage, dated 23rd December 1895, executed by Rustumrao and of its renewal mortgage, executed by Ajani (defendant No. 3) on 21st February 1902. It was held that the claim on the mortgage was time-barred as there was no acknowledgment before 23rd December 1908 by Rustumrao or any of his heirs. The plaintiff was accordingly declared not bound by any mortgages in favour of defendant No. 3. There were other subsequent mortgages by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 Yelhai and Ajani. But they also were declared not binding on plaintiff. The alienations made in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 by defendant No. 1 were, however, held binding and effective as against plaintiff during the lifetime of those defendants Nos. 2 and 3, they being entitled to maintenance for life. The gift by defendant No. 3 Ajani of Survey No. 59 in favour of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 as per Exhibit D-4, dated 26th April 1905, was, however, held to be invalid as against plaintiff. The partition which the ladies had made of the estate was also held to be invalid and not binding on the plaintiff. All these findings of Mr. Achyut Rao Sathe, Sub-Judge of the First Court were really unnecessary in view of the fact that plaintiff Trimbak's adoption was held invalid but as soon as the adoption was upheld they became material and necessary. It was, therefore, incumbent upon the several persons interested in upsetting those findings to appear before the First Appellate Court and urge arguments in support of their respective pleas so as to maintain the dismissal of the claim as against themselves, so far as the properties in which each of them had become interested on the basis of alienations made either by Rustum Rao or by his widow Laxmi (defendant No. 1) or by Yelhai (defendant No. 2) or by Ajani (defendant No. 3) or by all or some of them acting jointly, before the date of the plaintiff's adoption as per adoption deed Exhibit P-2, dated 3rd July 1913, were concerned. But as stated above none of them cared to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to them, even when they were served with notices of the hearing of the appeal in connection with the amendment prayed for. Under these circumstances the Additional District Judge, Mr. Pathak, was perfectly justified in presuming that there were no points left for decision on the merits.

I have stated above that the decree passed by the First Court made certain reservations in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Yelhai and Ajani for their lifetime. Ajani, however, died during the pendency of the appeal in the Additional District Judge's Court and consequently the reservation in her favour necessarily vanished with her death. Yelhai died during the pendency of the present second appeal and consequently the reservation made for her lifetime also became redundant as soon as she died.

The present appeal was jointly filed on 3rd September 1921 by Laxmi (defendant No. 1), Yelhai (defendant No. 2), and Bajai (original defendant No. 4, renumbered as defendant No. 3) and Lalchand and Poonamchand (defendants Nos. 7 and 8 only). It is now being pressed by Laxmi, and by Bajai in her own capacity and also in the capacity of an alleged heir of Yelhai, her deceased aunt, and by Lalchand and Poonamchand in their capacity as mortgagees; the plaintiff in his turn has filed a cross-objection urging a claim for the gadhi house against Yelhai, which is a mistake for Bajai and for costs of the litigation. I will deal with the appeal first and then with the cross-objection.

Ground No. 1 in which the validity of the adoption is challenged is not pressed. So, for the purposes of this appeal the plaintiff's title is undisputed by the appellants.

Ground No. 2 deals with the questions of amendment permitted by the lower Appellate Court. As already stated the amendment was sought during Ajani's lifetime against her and Champatrao (defendants No. 3 and 6) but by the time the application was pressed and the amendment was allowed Ajani was dead. The only person then interested in opposing was Champatrao and he did oppose it but was unsuccessful in his opposition. He did not appeal against the decree. It has, therefore, become final as against him. The other defendants have no right to urge an objection which was available to Champatrao alone. Ground No. 2, therefore, fails.

Ground No. 3 also similarly fails because Yelhai (defendant No. 2) to whose right to remain in possession, for life, of the property given for her maintenance, at the family arrangement of 1909, it relates, has died. I am not prepared to hold that under the arrangement Yelhai had acquired any interest which would devolve on her niece Bajai, at her death, because admittedly her right of enjoyment or residence was limited admittedly to her own lifetime. The above discussion disposes of ground No. 4 also. I need not deal with it separately.

The only point that remains for consideration is the one covered by ground No. 5. It deals with the question of the binding character of the mortgages in favour of defendants Nos 7 and 8. In this connection my attention is drawn to the oral pleadings recorded by Mr. A. S. Sathe, Sub-Judge, on 22nd April 1915 wherein on behalf of plaintiff an admission was made by the Pleader to the effect that the mortgages, dated 23rd December 1895 and 21st February 1902, were binding and the plaintiff's only plea was that the bond of 1902 which was a renewal of the old mortgage-bond was regularly satisfied. In spite of this admission the Judge recorded in paragraph 23 of his judgment a finding which on the face of it, is inconsistent with it. Appellant's Pleader urges before me that the view of the Court of first instance that there was no acknowledgment within 12 years after the due date of the mortgage of 1895 is incorrect in view of the fact that there was admittedly a renewal in 1902 by Ajani, as per Exhibit D-2, and that Ajani being a de facto manager and the representative of the estate a renewal mortgage by her amounted to an acknowledgment by a person representing the estate so as to extend the limitation under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. To this the respondent's Pleader's reply is that if an acknowledgment by a limited female heir would not extend limitation as against the reversionary owner much less a renewal mortgage by a trespasser would extend it. I think the respondent's contention is amply supported by the Privy Council decision in Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (1). In this view of the case neither the renewal mortgage in 1902 by Ajani in favour of the mortgagee, nor the subsequent mortgages executed by the other females will be of any avail to keep the old mortgage of 1895 in time as against the real owner i. e., the plaintiff. I do not, therefore, see any necessity to order a remand for a fresh decision on this point, or for inserting any declaration in respect of the mortgage of 1895 in the decree.

It is next contended on behalf of the appellants that this Court should give full effect to the admission made in the oral pleadings dated 22nd April 1915, and not permit the plaintiff to renege from it. It is argued that the admission on the point of the binding character of the mortgage of 1895 as also of its renewal mortgage of 1902, dispensed, in the circumstances of the case, with the necessity of proving that any acknowledgments were made by the mortgagor and his heirs before the expiry of 12 years from the due date of each mortgage. This argument is, no doubt, a plausible one but I am not prepared to accept it for the simple reason that the admission is on a point of law, and made by a Counsel and further that the person whose interests would be affected by it is a minor. For these reasons I hold that ground No. 5 also fails.

Although Bajai is one of the appellants, there is absolutely no ground in the memo of appeal relating to Survey No. 59 covered by the gift (Exhibit D-4) made in her favour. In spite of this an attempt is made at the hearing to press her claim in respect of that field. Field No. 64 is also claimed by her as an heir of Yelhai. I am not prepared to permit this new point not covered by any of the grounds of appeal to be pressed at this late stage. Similarly I cannot allow Laxmi (defendant No. 1) to claim her maintenance as against the plaintiff in this suit. It is still open to her to file a suit against plaintiff for a suitable provision being made for her residence and maintenance according to her position in life.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

As regards the cross-objection grounds Nos. 1 and 2 relate to the gadhi house. I think it is clearly an accidental slip to mention present defendant No. 3 as the person in possession instead of inserting a name of the original defendant No. 3, Ajani, against it. As Bajai is shown in the decree as the respondent No. 3 it is likely to lead to some confusion, I therefore, direct that the word "Ajani" be read instead of defendant No. 3 in the description of the item No. 5 and item No. 6 wrongly shown as No 3 in the decree of the First Appellate Court. As both Ajani and Yelhai are dead, I do not see any necessity for any rights of possession during their lifetime being reserved for them or any of them. I, therefore, order its deletion from the decree.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 291, 35 A. 237, 13 M. L. T. 437; 15 O. W. N. 605, 11 A. L. J. 389, (1913) M. W. N. 470, 17 O. L. J. 468, 15 Bom. L. R. 489, 25 M. L. J. 131, 40 L. A. 74 (P. C.).

LABHOCHAND v. DARYASINGH.

The question of costs only is now left. The Courts below have in their discretion thought fit to direct each party to bear its own costs throughout. Taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, I think the Courts below have not acted wrongly in the exercise of their discretion. I, therefore, decline to interfere with the order regarding costs. The appeal and the cross-objection thus fail and are dismissed with costs.

G. R. D. Appeal and cross-objection dismissed.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 203 (2)—
Abadi site—Landlord, when can re-enter—Usufructuary mortgage by tenant

A landlord gets no right of re-entry in respect of an abadi site under section 203 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act unless there is a permanent transfer such as sale, etc. He cannot sue for ejectment from the abadi site when there is a temporary loss of a right of enjoyment of occupation of the site on account of an execution of a mortgage with possession.

Govind Rao v. Amrit Rao, 4 N. L. R. 149 at p. 154 and Narain v. Behari, 31 Ind. Cas. 307, 11 N. L. R. 126, referred to.

A mortgage is not a transfer which permanently puts an end to the tenant's interest and, therefore, affords no cause of action to a landlord to sue for re-entry.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nimar, dated the 9th August 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 30 of 1923.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Lambardar of Mouza Hiwala had succeeded in getting a decree from the Court of first instance for possession of certain abadi sites against some mortgagees in possession but the lower Appellate Court has upset the decree. The plaintiff has, therefore, appealed to this Court. The sole question to be considered is whether the execution of a possessory mortgage of abadi sites should entail a forfeiture of the occupiers' right to the site in the abadi. The right decision of the question turns upon the interpretation of the provisions of section 203 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act.

The lower Appellate Court has held that the original tenants have not abandoned the house property and are yet entitled to occupy house sites in the said Mouza.

In view of the wording of section 203, sub-section (2) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, I hold that unless the tenant finally gives up his right of enjoyment of the occupancy the landlord gets no right of re-entry. Compare Govind Rao v. Amrit Rao (1). The observations of Stanyan, A. J. C. in Narain v. Behari (2) also show that unless there is a permanent transfer such as a sale the landlord's right of re-entry does not come into existence. A mortgage is not a transfer which permanently puts an end to the tenant's interest and, therefore, affords no cause of action to a landlord to sue for re-entry. On the whole the decision appealed against is correct and this appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. The costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

- Reg. 1793—VIII. See BENGAL DECENNIAL SETTLEMENT REGULATION.

Act of State—Acquisition of territory—Municipal Courts—Rights of subjects—Pleadings—Burden of proof—General statements.

When a territory is acquired by a Sovereign State for the first time that is an Act of State. It matters not how the acquisition has been brought about.

Any inhabitant of the territory can only make good in the Municipal Courts, established by the new Sovereign, such rights, as that Sovereign has, through his officers, recognised. Such rights as he had under the rule of predecessors avail him nothing. Nay more, even if in a treaty of cession it is stipulated that certain inhabitants should enjoy certain rights, that does not give a title to these inhabitants to enforce these stipulations in the Municipal Courts. The right to enforce remains only with the High Contracting Parties.

If there existed a right, either admitted or that could be established by decree of Court, and that right it was alleged was taken by an "Act of State", it would be necessary for the sovereign so specifically to plead the "Act of State", but if cession is admitted the onus is cast on the person admitting cession to show the acts acknowledging his rights after cession and a plea specifically using the words "Act of State" is not required.

In a treaty of cession a mere general statement that existing rights will be upheld cannot prevail against exact determinations made by Government Officers.

Any statement in general terms that rights will be respected must necessarily mean as these rights are on investigation determined by the Government Officials. To suppose that by such general statements in a proclamation the Government renounced their right to acknowledge what they thought right and conferred on a Municipal Court the right to adjudicate as upon rights which existed before cession, is a misapprehension of law. *P. The grant by a zemindar of a lease in perpetuity giving the lessee heritable and transferable rights, does not create a tenancy at a fixed rate, inasmuch as a fixed-rate tenancy cannot be created by a contract with the zemindar, and any rights which can be granted by the zemindars must be consistent with the provisions of section 20 of the U. P. Tenancy Act. Such a lessee might be said to be a thekadar within the meaning of the said section but even in that case his interest is not transferable. Therefore, if such a lessee mortgages his rights under the lease, the mortgage is void and unenforceable against the mortgagor in his lifetime, or after his death without having an heir, against the zemindar. Under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, a person who occupies land without the consent of the land-holder can be ejected as a non-occupancy tenant.

The fact that section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act has not been specifically pleaded in a suit for ejectment is not necessarily fatal to the suit.

In a suit for ejectment under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act it is open to the defendant to ask to have the question of proprietary right referred to Civil Court under section 199 of the Act.

An order passed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is no bar to a suit for ejectment of a tenant under the Agra Tenancy Act.

Acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from facts found and it is open, therefore, to the High Court to consider whether the question of acquiescence has been properly decided by the Court of Appeal below.

Acquiescence is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or by conduct. If a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its being done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous licensee. But mere quiescence or absence of interference is not sufficient to create an estoppel.

The vigilance required of and the duty cast upon a co-owner with regard to an infringement of his right is greater than and of a different description from what is expected of a neighbouring owner when he finds an act being done by the other on his own property.

More delay in taking legal proceedings, if the remedy is not barred, is nothing.

Arbitration, and award—Arbitrator—Jurisdiction exceeded or not exercised—Consent of parties—Arbitrator as witness—Duty of Court—Examination on commission—Limit of examination—Award—Minors parties

The consent of the parties to an arbitration that the arbitrator should leave certain items undetermined may take various forms, an expressed withdrawal, a mutual understanding not to submit the necessary materials, a mutual recognition by the parties that a condition of things exists which makes a decision impossible, or a diplomatic silence with regard to a mutual understanding.

If an Arbitrator chooses to undertake the decision of a variety of matters with the consent of parties and he deliberately, or by an oversight, without the consent of the parties, omits from his decision anything really material, it is sufficient to destroy the award; because, he derives his authority only from the consent of parties and from the moment he goes outside that consent, either by omitting to decide what they have submitted to him, or by deciding something which they have not submitted to him, he ceases to be clothed with the legal authority from which alone he derives his jurisdiction.

If in the course of events, which have happened since he took upon him his office, it has become impossible, or no longer desirable, either in the view of the Arbitrator or in the view of the parties themselves, to decide any one or another of the points originally submitted, and the parties themselves realise that the Arbitrator should disregard that point, the defect which would otherwise invalidate the award, ceases to be a defect.

An Arbitrator is not in the position of an ordinary witness. Therefore, a Judge ought never to issue a Commission for the examination of an arbitrator or submit him to a roving Commission by way of examination by the parties uncontrolled by the Judge himself, and when an arbitrator appears before him, he ought to exercise the severest possible control and circumspection over the examination.

The practice of calling Arbitrators indiscriminately, as though they were witnesses to the issue of fact, is not only an unreasonable burden upon the Arbitrators and certain to lead to a great deal of irrelevant evidence, but it also tends to lead the Judge unconsciously into a kind of re-hearing of the Arbitration. Nothing can be worse than that, because there is no appeal from an Arbitrator, and a Judge ought, from the first, severely to discountenance any proceeding which attempts to take that form. But more than that he ought to exercise a severe control over the interrogatories or examination of the Arbitrator when summoned.

An Arbitrator is a judicial person in respect of the matter of which he has been appointed. He is entitled to the respect and consideration due to a person occupying that position, and his evidence ought to be confined strictly to the points which are in the eyes of the law material as coming from him. That is to say, any question of fact, upon some evidence or allegation tending to establish or disprove his own misconduct, may be put to him if he is charged with misconduct.

Where an Arbitrator finds as a fact that a party did withdraw or did agree to certain things, that is a finding of fact which a Court of law cannot go behind.

An Arbitrator may be examined upon the course of procedure which he has adopted, the material which he has utilised in arriving at his decision and all matters affecting the award itself, that is to say, the drawing up of the award, the piece of paper and so forth. The slightest attempt to get to the materials of his decision, to get to the back of his mind, and to examine him as to why and how he arrived at a particular decision, should be immediately and ruthlessly excluded as undesirable.

Obiter—When the guardian of a minor has been properly appointed and the minor is properly represented in arbitration proceedings and his guardian is a party to the award both in his own capacity and as guardian of the minor, the award is binding on the minor for the time being through his guardian, and he cannot be heard to raise any objection which might be open to him as minor on the ground that his interest as an infant has not been properly looked after, until he reaches majority and raises it in the ordinary way. *A KHUN LAL v. The burden of proving that the arbitrators in arriving at an unfair award either refused to hear somebody or heard the matter without giving notice of the hearing lies on the party who wishes to set aside the award on these grounds.

When an application for setting aside the award is refused and the Court commits a material irregularity in doing so, or refuses to exercise jurisdiction, the High Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. *A GOBIND SINGH v. Per Kincaid, J. C.—Under a submission to refer all disputes arising out of a contract, the arbitrators have authority to decide what are the terms of the contract.

A suit to avoid a contract on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud, based on the allegation that a certain term was inserted in the contract without the plaintiff's knowledge, is a suit arising out of the contract and is liable to be stayed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, where the parties have agreed to refer all disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration.

Per Madgavkar, A. J. C.—The question of staying a suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act is one of discretion by the trying Court to be judicially exercised, rather than an absolute right of the defendant.

Arbitration—contd.

A defendant claiming a stay of a suit must show, that the suit is in respect of a matter agreed to be referred.

An application by a defendant for stay of a suit must be distinguished from an application for a stay of the arbitration proceedings in which a different set of considerations would arise.

A suit to avoid a contract on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud is not a suit relating to a dispute arising out of the contract and is not, therefore, liable to be stayed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, on the ground that the parties had agreed to refer all disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration.

Contract for sale of goods—Provision for arbitration in case of dispute—Dispute as to quality—Reference to Arbitrators—Burden of proving defectiveness in quality—Arbitrators, jurisdiction of—Stipulation for survey of goods—Award made without survey, whether valid

Plaintiffs entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of certain goods. The contract provided that, in the event of a dispute arising between the parties as to quality, etc., it would be referred to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce who would "arrange for survey in accordance with its rules." Plaintiffs took exception to the quality of the goods supplied and the dispute was referred to arbitration, the buyers "leaving the matter in the hands of the Arbitrators either to award cancellation or any other relief as they would deem fit." The Arbitrators made their award as follows: "We have considered the papers and as buyers are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of contract." Thereupon the buyers sued for a declaration that the award was invalid and inoperative.

Held, (1) that it was for the plaintiffs buyers to prove the case which they were alleging before the Arbitrators, namely, that the goods supplied were not in accordance with the contract by reason of their inferior quality.

(2) that as the buyers failed to produce the goods for inspection when called on by the Arbitrators to do so they could not complain of the decision of the Arbitrators that they (the buyers) had not proved their case.

(3) that having come to that conclusion, the Arbitrators were within their jurisdiction in awarding that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods.

(4) that the provision in the deed of reference to the effect that the Chamber should arrange for survey in accordance with its rules did not contemplate that a survey should be the only method of obtaining evidence as regards quality of the goods, or that if a survey was not held there should be no award.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 9 (b)—Arbitration agreement—Alternative methods of arbitration—Choice given to one party—Failure to follow chosen method—Other party, whether can fall on alternative method—Procedure.

Parties to a suit had entered into a contract whereby the plaintiffs had sold and defendants had bought a quantity of sugar. The contract contained, among others, an arbitration clause in the following words:—“Any disputes to be settled by arbitrations under the rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, or, at the option of the sellers by the arbitration of two European sugar importers of Calcutta, one to be appointed by the sellers and one by the buyers.” Disputes arose and the plaintiffs elected to have the arbitration of two European importers and declined to go to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. They did not however nominate an arbitrator whereupon the matter having been referred to the arbitration of the Chamber by the defendants, an ex parte award was made. The plaintiffs appealed.

Held, that the plaintiffs sellers having elected to go to the arbitration of two European importers it was not open to the defendants buyers to have the dispute arbitrated upon by the Tribunal in question, and in the case of failure of the plaintiffs to appoint an arbitrator within the time fixed, in the absence of a different intention expressed in the submission, the procedure laid down in section 9, sub-section (b) of the Arbitration Act should have been followed. *C SONDERMULL PORESHRAM v. So long as a benami transaction does not contravene the provisions of the law, the Courts are bound to give it effect. The benamidar has no beneficial interest in the property that stands in his name, he represents, in fact, the real owner and is a mere trustee for him.

An agreement to sue for the benefit of another requiring the latter to defray all the expenditure of the suit and giving him the right to become the owner of the property recovered under the decree in that suit, is not of an executory nature requiring the execution in future of a formal deed of conveyance. Such an agreement is not opposed to public policy, the paramount public policy being not to interfere with contracts entered into freely and voluntarily by men of full age and competent understanding.

In equity as well as in law non-existing property may be made the subject of an agreement. When the property comes into existence, the contract to assign works out as a complete assignment by itself, provided the nature of the property is such that its transfer is not forbidden by law. The assignment, however, to be operative, must be valid in form and where it is not so, the doctrine of part performance cures the defect.

Criterion—Burden of proof—Trusts Act (II) of 1882, s. 62.

Where a transfer has been made ostensibly in favour of a wife or a son, there will not in dealing with Indians be the same presumption of advancement as there would be in the case of English people.

The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. But the source of the purchase-money is to be the criterion in the absence of all other relevant circumstances.

The burden of proving that a transaction was a benami one is on the assessor, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose. Such a transfer, however, cannot be considered as nothing and the person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction.

That a large portion of the consideration money was paid by a husband for the purchase of property in the name of his wife does not relieve those who allege the transaction to be a benami one from proving it to be so. This burden is greatly enhanced if a great length of time has passed since the transaction impugned. O. RAJ KUNWAR v. MAHARAJ KUNWAR 832

Test—Onus—Nature of evidence necessary—Decision, how arrived at.

An benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction may suffice for the purpose.

The person who impugns the apparent character of a transaction must not rely, however, solely on probabilities. He must show something definite to establish that it is a sham transaction, on the principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person who claims contrary to the tenor of a deed and alleges that the apparent is not the real state of things.

The most important test to be applied in these cases is the source whence the consideration came.

Where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another person, the principle applies, that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money.

The decision of the Court should rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony.

Where, however, from the lapse of time, direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming, as to the payment of consideration, the case must be dealt with on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from proved or admitted facts.

The doctrine of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India, but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. G. BHUPANMOHINI DAS v. KUMUDHALA DAS, 28 C. W. N. 131, 39 C. L. J. 140, (1924) A. L. R. (O) 487 934

Transfer of property by Anglo-Indians—Presumption of advancement, whether arises—Documents executed in solemn form, interpretation of—Courts, duty of, in interpreting—Gift—Subsequent acts, whether relevant.

There is no widespread and persistent usage and practice among Anglo-Indians in Burma of transferring land benami without any intention of transferring the beneficial ownership in the way there is amongst Hindus and Muhammadans.

The presumption of advancement arises in the case of a transfer of land made by a registered deed by an Anglo-Indian husband to his Anglo-Indian wife.

In cases of transfers of land to wives or children without any intention of conferring on them the beneficial ownership, not only race, place of birth, domicile or residence have to be taken into consideration, but widespread and persistent usages and practices of executing such documents have also to be depended upon.

It is necessary that Courts should regard documents executed in a solemn form as primarily expressing the intention of the executant according to their tenor and evidence of strong motive should be forthcoming for acting with an intention contrary to that which the document indicates.

It is not only acts and conduct at or about the time of a deed of gift that are relevant but the evidence of subsequent act and conduct is also admissible. R. LECHE v. LECHE, 2 R. 253, 5 Bur. L.J. 85, (1924) A. L. R. (R) 283 686

Where in a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for assessment of fair rent, the tenant contends that he holds the land rent free, and the Revenue Officer assesses an annual rent, by compromise or otherwise, the decision of the Revenue Officer, by virtue of provisions of section 107 (1) of the Act, has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties, and if it is not challenged by way of a revision or appeal, under sections 108 and 108A of the Act, it operates as a final decree as deciding between the parties, (1) that the tenant holds the land subject to the payment of rent, (2) that the fair annual rent is that fixed by the Revenue Officer.

So long as the decision of a Revenue Officer, in proceedings under section 105A, Bengal Tenancy Act, remains in force, effect must be given to it under section 107 of the Act.

It is not open to defendants to raise by way of defence, under section 108, the very question which

A landlord applied for the settlement of fair rent under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. Then the tenant made an application under section 106 alleging that he had held his tenancy at a uniform rate of rent for so long that he was entitled to the presumption under section 50 of the Act. The hearing of the application under section 105 was stayed until the disposal of the application under section 106 on the ground, that the case under section 106 would dispose of the question whether the rent was fixed or not and this argument was not challenged on behalf of the landlord. The application under section 106 was dismissed for default and revived and decided eventually in favour of the tenant but between the date of its dismissal for default and the order for restoration the application under section 105 was taken up and a rent higher than that entered in the Record of Rights was fixed as fair rent.

Held: (Mukerjee, J., dissenting)—that as by mutual consent of the landlord and tenant the question whether the rent could be enhanced or not was to be settled in application under section 106, the matter should be looked at from the position which the parties would have occupied had the application under section 106 been not dismissed for default and the application under section 105 not taken up by the Revenue Officer and the parties should be bound by the decision in application under section 106 and not by that in application under section 105. *C. s. 158-B (2)—Land laws, scheme and policy of—Raiyat, position of—Under-raiyat, whether can acquire occupancy rights—Under-raiyat, tenure, whether transferable—Previous possession, when can form basis of suit

The scheme and policy of the land laws of Bengal is to originally divide persons having interest in agricultural land into two classes, viz., those in actual occupation or cultivating tenants, and those entitled to rent from such tenants. There may be several degrees of rent-

In theory the raiyat is supposed to be in actual occupation of the land and actually cultivating it. By virtue of this character, the raiyat is permitted to acquire a right of occupancy, or the right to remain in occupation of the land.

Though he is allowed to sub-let in the eye of law, the raiyat is the actual occupant of the land, occupying it through his lessee, as by sub-letting he does not become a middleman.

The Bengal Tenancy Act, however, has been less favourable to an under-raiyat and has taken away his right of acquiring a right of occupancy under any condition except by local usage or custom. He is no better than a tenant-at-will with no tangible interest in the land except that of holding it till the end of the agricultural year.

The right of an under-raiyat is not transferable.

The interest of an under-raiyat is not heritable.

More previous possession, unless perfected into adverse possession, cannot form the foundation of a suit for recovery of possession. C. JNANENDRA NATH v. DUKHIRAM, 28 C. W. N. 865, 40 C. L. J. 90, (1924) A. I. R. (O) 850. 386

s. 158B (2), object of—Co-sharer landlord whether can waive benefit—Omission to serve notice of sale, effect of—Sale held in contravention of Statute, whether null and void—Question, how determined—Irregularity and nullity, distinction between—Test

The object of section 158B sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to protect the co-sharer landlord.

It is open, however, to the co-sharer landlord to waive the benefit of sub-section (2) of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The omission to serve upon the co-sharer landlord the notice contemplated by sub-section 2 of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not nullify the sale or alter its character to that of a sale held in execution of a money decree where the co-sharer concerned consents to the sale.

It cannot be maintained on principle that because a sale has been held in contravention of a statutory provision, it must, irrespective of the nature and purposes of the provisions, be deemed to be null and void.

When the provisions of a Statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention the matter must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated.

An irregularity is a deviation from a rule of law which does not take away the foundation or authority for the proceeding or apply to its whole operation, whereas a nullity is a proceeding that is taken without any foundation for it or is so essentially defective as to be of no avail or effect whatever, or is void and incapable of being validated.

The safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection, if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity, if he cannot, it is a nullity. *C. The mere fact that such a person settles tenants upon the land does not change the nature of his holding.

In order to determine whether a tenant is a raiya or not the test is not the use which the tenant has made of the land but the purpose for which the land is leased. PAT GAYANI DAS v. DWARKA MANDAR, 3 Pat 540, (1924) A. I. R. (Pat) 269; (1924) A. I. R. (Pat) 557. 79

Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act (II of 1918) s. 49K—Sale of tenure of aboriginal, whether nullity—Waiver of provisions of Act—Application to set aside sale—Limitation.

A sale of the tenure of an aboriginal in execution of a decree in contravention of the provisions of section 49K of the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1918 is a nullity.

The Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1918 was enacted with the object of protecting the aboriginals against indiscreet transactions. It is not, therefore, open to an aboriginal to waive the benefit of the provisions of the Act.

The question of limitation arises only where a sale is a valid sale until it is set aside, it does not arise where the sale is altogether void. C. JOGESWAR MAHAJI v. JHAPAL SANTAL, 51 C. 224, 28 C. W. N. 556; (1924) A. I. R. (O) 638. 848

A suit against the Secretary of State for India and other defendants for an injunction restraining the former from recovering the full economic rent of certain lands and paying the same to the latter and restraining the latter from receiving the same, even if it falls under paragraphs 1 and 4 of section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, is saved from the bar created by section 5 (a) of the Act.

The Government has power to regulate by rules the question of emoluments relating to service performed to the State under the fifth provision of section 8, Schedule B, Bombay Titles to Rent-free Estates Act, but it has no power under that Act to frame any rules with reference to the resumption of lands given as emoluments of any hereditary office, such as karis, village joshies, etc. Any such rules must be ultra vires. The office of jangam of a math comes under the first paragraph of section 8, Schedule B of Bombay Titles to Rent-free Estates Act.

Apart from some statutory provision or some rule having the force of law, the Collector has no power to disturb the possession of a third party, over lands appertaining to the office of a village servant, who may have acquired rights in respect of such lands under the operation of law, as, for example, by adverse possession. In such a case the Collector has no power either to evict the person in possession or to levy economic rent in respect of the lands.

section 3—refers to alienation inter vivos and not to Wills.

The Encumbered Estates (Amendment) Act creates a sort of administration of the immovable estate of the debtor in some respects resembling that pursued in an administration suit but with the material difference that whereas in an administration suit the satisfaction of the claims of the creditors is primarily in view, in proceedings under the Act the protection of the debtor and the protection of his estate so far as practicable in spite of its encumbered condition is the main solicitude of the authorities concerned.

The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates (Amendment) Act restricts the power of the holder in disposing of the property in so far as it would interfere with the management of the estate. But the right to succession to the estate of the holder is not affected by the Act, and is saved by the provisions of section 23. C. PROTAP CHANDRA v. JAGADISH CHANDRA, 40 C. L. J. 331 886

Attachment before judgment of immovable property—Small Cause Court, whether can order attachment—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—"Attachment" and "order of attachment", distinction between—"Interlocutory order", meaning of—Small Cause Court, whether has inherent powers

Per Curiam (Wainsley and Chotener, JJ. dissentiente).—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to make an order for attachment of immovable property before judgment.

There is a difference between ordering the attachment of property and attaching the property. If a Provincial Small Cause Court makes an order for attachment of immovable property, it would have to send it to an ordinary Civil Court for execution.

Per Sanderson, C J.—In construing an Act words found therein should not be regarded as surplusage and full effect should be given to them if a reasonable interpretation can be found.

The only reasonable interpretation to be placed upon the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in section 7 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code is that it was intended to exclude from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause Court the matters particularly specified in clauses (c) and (e) of section 94.

The meaning of the words "if it is so prescribed" in section 94 of the Civil Procedure Code is, if it is prescribed by the rules and orders contained in the First Schedule of the Code.

The order for attachment contemplated by section 94, clause (e) of the Code must be such an order as is specified in O. XXXVIII, r. 6, viz., an order for attachment before judgment.

Per Mukerjee, J.—Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action, which decides some point or matter which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue, is known as an interlocutory order.

Order XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code has not been excluded either by section 7 read with section 94 or by O. L. and is applicable to a Provincial Court of Small Causes.

Even a Provincial Court of Small Causes can act under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and pass such orders as may be necessary.

Per Chotener, J.—A Court which has not the power of executing a decree by attachment of immovable property after judgment, cannot have the power of attaching such property before judgment.

Per Wainsley, J.—A Small Cause Court cannot attach property whether moveable or immovable

s. 10—Stay of suit—"Matter in issue", meaning of—Appeal, whether continuation of suit

For the purpose of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, an appeal is a continuation of a suit. In order to attract the operation of section 10, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that every matter in dispute should be directly and substantially in issue in the two suits. The expression "matter in issue" in the section has reference to the entire subject-matter in controversy between the parties and is not equivalent to "any of the questions in issue." S JAINARAIN BABULAL v NATHOOMAL MANOHARLAL. 539

The decision in a case where there is a conflict of interest between the co-defendants, one of whom actively helps the plaintiff as against the other defendant, and where it is necessary to adjudicate between the defendants inter se to give appropriate relief to the plaintiff, operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the co-defendants. R MAUNG THWE v MA SHWE PON, 3 Bur. s. 11—"Heard and finally decided," meaning of—Finding recorded to avoid remand, whether res judicata

For a finding to become res judicata, it is necessary that the point should have been "heard and finally determined."

Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to questions regarding the satisfaction of the decree and not to questions arising in the proceedings for the making of a preliminary mortgage-decree final, as a suit on a mortgage remains pending till the final decree.

An alienee deriving his title under a surrender pendente lite, between the preliminary decree and the final decree, is bound by the terms of the preliminary decree and cannot be allowed to re-open the questions already decided in the suit, nor can he sue for the establishment of his title. *N. Some pieces were selected and the remainder returned with a payment of price. Subsequently other consignments of cloth were sent to G. either by parcel post or were taken there in person. In a suit brought at B. by the seller for the balance of price.

Held, that there was an implied contract to pay at B. and the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit.

ss. 25, 151—Inherent jurisdiction, scope of—Suit, when to be stayed—Transfer—Test—Suit, vexatious and oppressive.

Appeals to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court have to be regarded with the greatest caution. But if after exercising such caution the Court is clearly of opinion that the jurisdiction ought to be exercised, it should not be intimidated from so doing because no case on all fours is forthcoming from the reported decisions in the various High Courts.

The Court will interfere to prevent vexatious proceedings which would have the effect of preventing the due administration of justice.

Section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply or at any rate should not be confined to objection to a particular Judge personally. The objection must apply to the High Court as a whole.

The test for a transfer is much the same as for a stay of suit under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code or alternatively the rather more lenient test adopted in section 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Plaintiffs who carried on business in Bombay, Rangoon and Calcutta and had their head office at Bombay brought a suit at Bombay against defendants who also carried on business at these places as merchants and commission agents. The suit was for accounts in respect of certain transactions which had taken place at Rangoon under instructions of a partner of the plaintiffs' firm. The books of account as well as all the principal witnesses were at Rangoon and the suit involved a determination of the custom of trade observed at Rangoon with regard to the transactions. After the filing of the suit defendants paid what they regarded as balance due to the plaintiffs and offered to pay taxed costs to date but prayed that the suit should be stayed.

Held, (1) that it would be most inconvenient to the defendants to have the suit tried at Bombay;

(2) that as from the date when the defendants paid the amount to the plaintiffs and offered to pay taxed costs, the suit was vexatious and oppressive to the defendants;

(3) that the plaintiff was at liberty to withdraw the suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, but in default of his so doing within the time limited for presenting an appeal, all further proceedings in the suit should be stayed. *B. JETHABHAI VERSEY & Co v. The State Railway Provident Institution is governed by the Rules contained in the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, Appendix I, and the General Fund Rules have no application to it.

The word "discharged" in rule 30 of the Rules contained in the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, Appendix I, does not necessarily mean "dismissed"; it is wide enough to include the case of a servant who has been permitted to return or take his discharge.

A compulsory deposit is a deposit which goes into the fund as a compulsory deposit, within the meaning of section 4 (1) of the Provident Funds Act, and is at that date received and classified as such, and so long as such a deposit subsists in the fund it continues to be a compulsory deposit, irrespective of the fact that it is liable to withdrawal on the death or retirement of the depositor under rule 22 of the Rules contained in Appendix I, Volume II of the State Railway Open Line Code.

Such deposits as the above are protected from attachment under section 60 (1) (k) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 4 (1) of the Provident Funds Act.

A compulsory deposit includes the sums deposited by the depositor himself and the contributions in respect of those deposits made by the Railway and the interest or increment accrued on them.

Per Ghose, J.—A deposit cannot be said to be payable on demand by reason of the fact that it becomes payable under the Rules on the death or retirement of the depositor. C. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJ KUMAR, (1923) A. I. R. (O.) 585 699

There is no provision in the law that the auction-purchaser must be made a party in an application to set aside the sale. It is enough for the purposes of an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, that the auction-purchaser should be mentioned by name.

Obiter—It is desirable that in an application for setting aside a sale, the Court, without reference to the parties mentioned in the petition, should direct the issue of notice of the application upon the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and any other party who may appear to have been affected by the sale. *C. The consent in writing of the Advocate-General to the institution of a suit will not bring the suit within the meaning of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, unless the plaintiffs have an interest in the trust. The object of the section is to prevent people interfering in the administration of charitable trusts merely in the interests of others and without any real interest of their own.

The fact that plaintiffs in a suit are descendants though only in the female line, of the founder of a chatram, gives them an interest in the proper administration of the trust sufficient to enable them to maintain the suit although they themselves may never use the chatram.

Hindu temples are prima facie to be taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them.

That the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu might desire to resort to a particular temple gives him an "interest in the trust" would defeat the object with which the Legislature inserted these words in section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The last survivor of the descendants in the male line of the founder of a chatram has a right to appoint a trustee of the charity but if he falsely describes the property to be his own property, an appointment by him of the manager of such property is invalid.

s. 115—Revision—Limitation

The High Court will not interfere in revision upon a technical question of limitation where substantial justice has been done.

Where it was open to argument whether limitation in a suit for recovery of debt should run from one date or another but the debt was really due, the High Court refused to interfere in revision and upheld the decree in favour of the creditor.

In a suit brought against the defendant by one K, plaintiff stood surety for the defendant that the latter would pay the price of coal sold to him by K. K obtained a decree against the plaintiff as surety. In order to obtain a review of judgment plaintiff deposited the amount of the decree in Court on the 5th September 1919 but the application for review was dismissed and K. withdrew the amount on 21st April 1920. The plaintiff then brought his suit on the 20th April 1923 to recover the money from the defendant his principal. It was contended that the date of payment to the creditor was the date of deposit, and, therefore, the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 61 of the Limitation Act:

Held, that as the creditor was not entitled to withdraw the money immediately it was deposited by the plaintiff in Court and before the application for review was dismissed, the date of deposit in Court was not the date of payment to the creditor. A MOHAMMAD NAQI v. HARGU LAL 1011

Held, (Graham, J. dissenting), that the District Judge did not give proper consideration to the matter and though he had jurisdiction over the subject-matter he exercised it in an irregular way; (2) that the High Court had jurisdiction to interfere with the order in revision under section 115,

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Civil Procedure Code, and the order was liable to be set aside.

Per Subhawardy, J.—When an application is presented to a Court, it is its duty to look into the matter to give its consideration to it and to come to decision on all the materials which have been placed before it. If the Court does not do so, though it may have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, it fails to exercise that jurisdiction in a regular way, and the High Court has power to interfere to set it right.

Per Graham, J.—The power conferred by O. XLI, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code upon Appellate Courts is discretionary, though of course that discretion must be judicially exercised. Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot confer jurisdiction on the Court to do what is prohibited by positive law

The devolution of interest in property in a suit pending the suit can make no difference in the Court-fee to be paid

In a suit for partition the defendant contended that the Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient. The Court decided this issue in favour of the plaintiff and no appeal was made against this order. Meanwhile the defendant died and his sons were brought on the record as his legal representatives and the vendees from the plaintiff of a portion of the property were added as plaintiffs. The suit came on before another Judge who decided that the plaintiff should pay ad valorem fee. The plaintiff applied to the High Court in revision

Held, (1) that the Judge had no jurisdiction to alter the order of his predecessor except in accordance with law;

(2) that the addition of the plaintiff's vendees as co-plaintiffs did not alter the nature of the suit, and made no difference in the Court-fee payable. PAT HARTAR PRASAD V. MAHESHWARI PRASAD, 3 Pat 654

s. 151, O. XXVI, r. 16, O. XLVII, r. 1—Commissioner for taking accounts—Review, power of—Enquiry, when can be re-opened—Party aggrieved, remedy of—Practice

A Commissioner appointed by the Court to take accounts of the dealings and transactions between the parties has no power to "review" in the technical sense, either under section 151 or under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code

The Commissioner, however, may, in his discretion, record his finding on each item of the account objected to during the progress of the reference or he may record his findings after he has heard evidence on all objections and surcharges. He is not bound to record his finding on any one objection before he proceeds to deal with the next. But if he does so his finding on any of the objections is not final. He may, on proper grounds, re-open the inquiry into any one or more of the items before his report is made. Until then he decides nothing that is final and conclusive

But where every opportunity is given to a party to prove his objection to a particular item, and the Commissioner has after hearing the parties recorded his finding, it is highly undesirable that he should re-open the enquiry merely because he is invited to do so by the party.

If the Commissioner does re-open the enquiry, it must be on grounds similar to those mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, not because the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 1, apply to proceedings before him but because that rule affords the best guide in a matter of this kind. If he re-opens the inquiry on grounds which are not proper, the party aggrieved can object only by way of exceptions to his report. B FERNANDEZ V. RODRIGUES, 25 Bom L. R. 280, 47 B. 593, (1924) A. s. 151, O. XLV, r. 13—Certificate for appeal to Privy Council, application for—Stay of execution—Inherent jurisdiction, exercise of

The High Court has inherent power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, in appropriate circumstances, to stay execution on receipt of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, pending the passing of orders on the application.

This inherent power should, however, be sparingly exercised in view of the provisions of O. XLV, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and the onus is on the applicant to establish good grounds for staying execution. S. NARUMAL V. JAGATMAL

Under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, there is no right in any party to have a clerical or arithmetical mistake corrected. The matter is left to the discretion of the Court and the discretion has to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case. A KISHORI MOHAN V. CHHANGA LAL

s. 152—Dower-decree—Form defective—Execution—Decree, whether can be amended

A dower-decree was drawn up in general terms and did not specify the exact shares in which the decree-holder was entitled to succeed against the several defendants (heirs of the plaintiff's deceased husband). In execution it was contended that all the defendants were jointly and severally responsible.

Held, that the Execution Court was bound to construe the decree in the light of the admitted fact that both parties were fighting over a dower-decree, and if the decree itself created any obstacle, justice could be done by amending it so that the shares of the various defendants may be

Amendment of pleadings, object of—Pending suit—Fresh defence, whether can be taken—Court, discretion of—Recovery of balance due on mortgage—Application for personal decree against mortgagor, form of

When a suit is pending, a defendant, with the permission of the Court, may be allowed to take a fresh defence to the suit.

The object of amendment of pleadings is to determine the real question in controversy between the parties.

The matter of allowing amendment of pleadings is entirely within the discretion of the Court.

There is nothing in O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code which requires that an application for a personal decree against the mortgagor should be in writing, much less is there anything to show that the application should be signed by anybody.

Even assuming that a written application is necessary, such application may be allowed to be signed at any stage of the proceedings under section 153 of the Code. A SANTI LAL v. RAJ NARAIN (1924) A. I. R. (A) 804 65

O. I, rr. 8, 10—Representative suit—Plaintiff not possessing common interest with other members—Other members whether constructively parties—Parties, addition of—Bona fide mistake—Suit by wrong person.

Under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, it is not any person that may sue on behalf of a class, but it is that person who has an interest which is the same as that possessed by the whole body of persons. Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit is in order, if the relief sought is in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposes to represent. If this condition is found wanting, and if the plaintiff turns out not to be a member of the class on whose behalf he professed to institute the suit, the suit is wrongly constituted, and is not a representative suit and no member of the class is constructively a party to it.

On an application under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, to add a person as party plaintiff to a suit under O. I, r. 8, it must be alleged and proved that the suit was instituted originally in the name of the wrong person through a bona fide mistake. M. KRISHNA IYER v. PACHAPPA CHETTY, (1924) M. W. In all cases, save those excepted under O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, all persons interested in the equity of redemption should be joined as parties to a suit relating to a mortgage.

The omission to make a puisne mortgagee or a subsequent transferee of the mortgaged property a party to a mortgage suit is not fatal to the suit.

A mortgage suit in which all the persons interested in the equity of redemption have not been joined need not necessarily fail. The provisions of O. I, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, are just as applicable to a mortgage suit as to any other suit.

In special circumstances a mortgage-debt can be split up.

Every part or item of the mortgaged property is not liable for the whole mortgage-debt and where the heirs of one of several mortgagors have not been joined in a suit on the mortgage, a decree may be passed against the defendants proportionate to their shares in the mortgaged properties at the date of the suit. *C. O. I, r. 10 (2)—Addition of parties to suit, when permissible—Court, discretion of

The provisions of O. I, r. 10 (2), Civil Procedure Code, confer a discretion on the Court to add parties to a suit. This discretion must be exercised in view of the special circumstances of the particular litigation, subject, however, to the general rule that parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit.

A person may be added as a party to a suit only in two cases, first, when he ought to have been joined and has not been so joined, or, secondly, when without his presence the question in the suit cannot be completely decided. C. ABDUL GAFUR v. ALI MIAN, 28 O. W. N. 805 369

Plaintiff brought a suit for pre-emption against the vendee of four different plots, sold to him by different owners at different times. The objection as to misjoinder of causes of action and parties was overruled by the Trial Court and the suit was decreed in respect of all the four plots. The Appellate Court, however, directed the institution and trial of four separate suits. Against this order of remand, the vendor preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Held, (1) that the suit was properly instituted, (2) that the lower Appellate Court should not have interfered with the discretion of the Trial Court in the matter. L. PIARA RAM v. KISHO NATH, 6 L. L. J. 349 605

Supreme Court in England. Under it an alternative relief may, subject to certain regulations, be asked and several causes of action joined in the same statement of claim, as laid down in O II, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code.

Mere intention to defraud will not deprive the true owner from recovering his property. When, however, the fraudulent purpose has been effected the maxim "in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" applies and the Court will help neither party. A guilty party cannot be permitted to defeat a judgment by showing that in obtaining it he had practised a fraud on the Court. O BANSDHAR v. AJUDHIA PRASAD, 10 O & A L R 01, 27 O. C. 175, 11 O. L. O. III, r. 1, O. V, r. 1, cl. (2), O. IX—Absence of party—Vakil having no instructions—“Appearance” of party—Ex parte decree—Formal withdrawal of Vakil, if necessary

Where a Pleader appears for a party in default and states that he has no instructions, there is no “appearance” of the party, and the provisions of O IX, Civil Procedure Code, are applicable.

When a Pleader appears and says he has no instructions, he intends to inform the Court that though he has filed an appearance he does not propose to appear for his client. It is not necessary for him to say that he severs his connection with the case or that he withdraws his vakalat. No set form of words is necessary to convey to the Court the information that he has ceased to appear.

Failure to appear and refusal to appear stand on the same footing. In neither case is there an “appearance.” M. ARUNACHALA GOUDAN v. KATHA GOUDAN, 47 M. L. J. 514, (1924) M. W. N. 835, 20 L. W. 795, (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 842. 107

O. III, r. 4—“Appearance,” meaning of—Pleader reporting no instructions except to apply for adjournment—Endorsement on back of plaint—Adjournment refused—Withdrawal of vakalat—Leave of Court

Where a Pleader for the plaintiff in a case asks for an adjournment and states that, if the adjournment is refused, he has no further instructions to go on with the case, and makes an endorsement to that effect on the back of the plaint, there is no “appearance” and the endorsement by the Vakil is a perfectly good written withdrawal from his duties and obligations under the vakalat.

Where a Court assents to such conduct of the Vakil and raises no question about his withdrawal, it must be taken to have given its consent.

Order III, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, does not require the writing containing the withdrawal by a Pleader of his vakalat to be in any specified form, nor is any formality necessary for the leave of Court.

If the Pleader for an absent defendant is not duly instructed, and takes no part in the conduct of the case on the date of the hearing, the hearing of the case is ex parte even though the Pleader is present in Court, and an application to set aside the decree is maintainable. But if the defendant appears properly as required by O. V, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, that is, by a Pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, the hearing is not ex parte, and the application would not be maintainable. *B. O. V, r. 17—Service to be personal—Substituted service, when allowed—Process-server, duty of

The service of a summons should be personal unless there is an agent empowered to accept service and it is only when personal service cannot be effected that a process-server is justified in proceeding in accordance with the other provisions of O. V, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code.

When, therefore, the notice of an appeal was sent to a village S, but the peon on arriving at S did not find the plaintiffs there, or any other male member of the family upon whom the service could be effected, and was told that they had gone to village J, some two or three miles distant from S, but instead of proceeding to J, the peon purported to effect service by affixing the notice at the entrance of the house at S and the appeal was heard ex parte.

Held, (1) that the service was not good service under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

(2) that it was the duty of the peon to endeavour to effect personal service upon the plaintiffs either by proceeding to J or returning to the Court and stating the facts in order that fresh notice should issue. *C. Where, therefore, in a suit instituted within time the plaint is returned for presentation to proper Court and the circumstances enabling the plaintiff to claim benefit of section 14, Limitation Act, appear on the face of the record and there is an order of the Court that the suit is not cognisable by it, along with an endorsement showing the date of the return of the plaint, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to amend the plaint by adding a statement showing the ground upon which exemption from limitation is claimed, if at the time of presentation of plaint to proper Court the suit is time-barred. *L. Held, that there was a clear denial of the plaintiff's allegation of the widow's time of death, and the fact that there was no counter-allegation as to what that date exactly was could not be deemed to amount to an admission within the meaning of O. VIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code. M. RAJAGOPALACHARIAR v. BASHTACHARIAR. 20 L. W. 399, 47 M. L. J. 520, (1924) M. W. N. 788, (1924) A. I. R. (M) 838. 584

The words "ascertained sum" used in O. VIII, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code are used to exclude such items as liquidated damages and means profits the amount of which is not ascertainable until the Court determines them.

Where a defendant says that there were definite sums of debit and credit between the parties and that on the date of suit a definite known balance, the amount of which is given in the written statement, was due to the defendant from the plaintiff, the sum so claimed is an "ascertained sum" for which a set-off is allowed. *A. Where after many hearings, the Vakil for the defendant, stated on the final hearing day that he had no instructions, but the Court disposed of the case on the merits, on an application to set aside the decree as ex parte.

Held, (1) that there was an appearance and O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code applied to the case.

(2) that the defendant ought to have filed an appeal against the decree.

(3) that the filing of an application to set aside the decree as if it had been made under O. IX, r. 13 was wrong. M. BALAKRISHNA AYYAR v. MUTHAIMAL. 1028 foreclosure—Decree not in accordance with judgment, effect of—Subsequent proceedings, whether valid—Summons, when "duly served"—Mortgagor misled by Court's agent—Foreclosure decree, whether can be enforced.

The decree which is drawn up by a Court must be in accordance with the judgment. Where, therefore, the judgment gives a decree for sale but the decree drawn up is a preliminary decree for foreclosure, it is not in accordance with the judgment, is invalid and vitiates all subsequent proceedings in the case.

A summons cannot be said to be "duly served" within the meaning of O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, if it is a misleading document having no relevance to the real proceeding which is contemplated.

It is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme, and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit, or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. It must at any rate not fall below the standard of honesty which it exacts from those on whom it has to pass judgment. The slightest suspicion of trickery or unfairness must affect the honour of the Court and impair its usefulness.

Therefore, a Court must not enforce against a mortgagor or any one interested in the equity of redemption, a foreclosure decree when he has been misled by its duly accredited agent through the issue of a notice for a decree for sale. *A BALGOBIND v. O. XX, r. 7, O. XXI, r. 2—Certification of payment out of Court—Decree not drawn up, effect of.

Order XX, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that the decree shall bear the date, the day on which the judgment was pronounced. Therefore, the date of the decree may be held to be not the date on which the decree is reduced to writing and signed by the Court but the date on which the Court delivers its judgment and expresses what the decree is.

When a person has a judgment of the Court in his favour, it may be said that he then obtains his decree and that the decree, when subsequently drawn up relates back to that time.

An application for certifying payment of a decree and satisfaction out of Court is maintainable even though the decree is not formally drawn up. O. GIRIBALA DAS v. BISWAMBHAR HALDAR, 40 O. L. J. 87, (1924) A. I. R. (O) 1064. 746

Under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, in order that a payment to a decree-holder should be recognised by the Court executing the decree, it is not necessary that the payment should be both certified and recorded. A certificate on the warrant of arrest by the plaintiff's authorised Pleadar that the decree was satisfied complies with the requirements of the rule.

Where a manager of a Hindu joint family is himself on the record as the next friend or guardian of a minor party to suit, his powers are controlled by O. XXXII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, and he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without leave of the Court.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

A payment, therefore, to a decree-holder as guardian although made and certified cannot be recognised by the Court executing the decree when leave of Court was not previously obtained under O XXXII, r 8, Civil Procedure Code.

A payment to one of several joint decree-holders will not be satisfaction of the decree even in part unless the payee is an agent of the others entitled in law to receive the whole amount on their behalf, or the distinct shares of each joint decree-holder are determined and known.

Where in execution of a decree by the plaintiff for himself and as guardian of his minor brothers, plaintiffs Nos 2 and 3, the judgment-debtor was arrested and taken to Court and the plaintiff's Vakil endorsed on the warrant that the decree had been fully satisfied and that the judgment-debtor may be released, but the Executing Court refused to record satisfaction on the ground that two of the plaintiffs were minors, and no further steps were taken by either party thereon, and some time later the plaintiff for himself and as guardian of the minor plaintiffs again applied to execute the decree.

Held, that the previous leave of Court to the payment to the guardian not having been obtained, such payment was inoperative and was not binding either on the minors or even on the guardian himself and the decree not having been legally satisfied to any extent a fresh execution application was maintainable. M PICHCHAKKUTITTA PILLAI v DORASWAMI MOOPANAR, 47 M L J 498, (1924) M W N 815. 588

O. XXI, rr. 58, 62—Objection by mortgagee to attached property—Order in objector's favour—Subsequent proceedings by mortgagee objector—Decree-holder auction-purchaser, whether can circumvent order

A decree-holder cannot circumvent the order in an objection case under O XXI, r 58, Civil Procedure Code, by himself becoming an auction-purchaser.

When, therefore, an objection under O. XXI, r 58, Civil Procedure Code, is allowed and the attached property is sold subject to the objector's mortgage, the decree-holder by becoming an auction-purchaser cannot challenge the mortgage in a subsequent suit by the mortgagee for foreclosure of the mortgage and is bound by the order made in the objection case. N GOVIND v DHAKTU, (1923) A I R (N) 252. 771

O. XXI, r. 63—Claim petition—Prayer to notify contents—Dismissal—Order against claimant

An order upon a claim petition, which expresses no final judgment on the rights put forward, but simply directs the sale after notifying the claim is an order against the claimant for the purposes of O XXI, r 63 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where an order on a claim petition adverse to the defendant is not set aside, he cannot take advantage of a suit filed by the plaintiff to re-agitate the question of his title. M RAMALINGAPPA v ALLURU NARAYANAPPA. 737

O. XXI, rr. 95, 97—Auction-purchaser—Delivery of possession—Obstruction—Suit for recovery of possession—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 11A

The resistance or obstruction contemplated in O XXI, r 97, Civil Procedure Code, is some overt act of resistance or obstruction to the giving of possession by some person who is present at the time.

Where, therefore, an auction-purchaser applies under O. XXI, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code, and gets possession from the tenants of the person in possession without any resistance, a suit against the auction-purchaser for recovery of possession is not governed by Art 11A, Schedule of the Limitation Act. R T C BOSS v O R CHOWDHURY, (1924) A I R (R) 261, 3 Bur L J 71. 865

O. XXII, rr. 3, 4, 10—Two devolutions—Assignment and death—Assignee's rights

Where there are two devolutions—the death of a party and the transfer by him of his interest in the suit—the transferee has the right to be brought on the record in place of the deceased transferor. Therefore, the death of a plaintiff after the assignment of his interest does not take away the assignee's right to be substituted in the suit. C PRADASH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA v SHAMA CHARAN DUTT. 991

in appeal—One respondent dying during pendency of appeal—Representatives of deceased not made parties in time—Court passing decree against all respondents—Decree, whether null and void

Where during the pendency of an appeal one of the several respondents dies and no application is made in time to have his legal representatives made parties, if the interests of the several respondents can be distinguished and separated, then the appeal shall abate as against the deceased respondent only, but if no such determination is possible, it shall abate against them all.

Therefore, where several persons buying property jointly by a joint sale-deed are sued for recovery of possession and during the pendency of appeal against them one of them dies, and the Court passes a decree against all of them, without representatives of the deceased being made parties, the decree is null and void against all of them and not only against the deceased, otherwise there will be two inconsistent or con-

O. XXIII, rr. 1, 2—Withdrawal of suit—
Permission for fresh suit on payment of costs—Second suit without payment of costs, whether maintainable.

Order XXIII, r. 2 (b), Civil Procedure Code, must be read as referring not to permission to withdraw a suit as well as permission to institute a fresh suit, but merely as allowing the Court to give permission to institute a fresh suit in place of the one which has been withdrawn. Inasmuch as the withdrawal of the suit does not require the permission of the Court, it must be taken that the first suit is withdrawn when the order is passed and is no longer pending and the permission granted refers only to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions. Therefore, where an order has been made under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, giving to a plaintiff, who withdraws a suit, permission to institute a fresh suit on condition of paying the costs, a subsequent suit instituted without paying such costs is barred.

O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment before judgment—Security bond, execution of—Dismissal of suit—Decree in appeal—Security bond, if effective.

There is no general rule in all cases that whenever a bond is given as security to a Court for any decree that may be passed by that Court, it should be construed as meaning that the security is available for the proceedings not only in that Court but also in the Courts of Appeal.

On an application for attachment before judgment, the judgment-debtor executed a security bond under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, agreeing to give certain properties as security and bound himself and his property as responsible for the decree amount "in case the aforesaid suit" was decided in favour of the plaintiff. The suit was subsequently dismissed by the First Court but was decreed in appeal. On an application to enforce the security bond.

Held, that the bond which really took the place of the attachment before judgment was intended to take effect only if the attaching Court passed a decree and since the suit was dismissed, the bond ceased to have any further effect and the decree-holder was not entitled to any charge on the property on the strength of the bond. M SUBRAMA IYAR v SOVALINGA SUBBA IYAR, (1924) M. Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

(1) that the finding was not based on legal evidence, and (2) that the Record of Rights which raised a presumption in favour of the defendants could not be placed before the lower Appellate Court owing to its late publication and the case should be re-tried in the light of this record.

Held, (1) that the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court could not be disturbed in second appeal;

(2) that as the defendants could not produce the Record of Rights in the lower Appellate Court in spite of all due diligence it should be admitted in evidence under O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(3) that the case should be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may try the question of the status of the defendants after admitting the Record of Rights as evidence in the case. C. INDRA BHUSAN SAHA v. JANARDHAN SAHA, 28 C. W. N. 945, (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 1071 104

O. XLI, r. 33—Appellate Court's power to interfere in matter not appealed against

The object of O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil Procedure Code is to enable the Appellate Court, where its decision interferes with or modifies or extends the decision of the lower Court, to give effect to that decision by interfering, if necessary, even with the rights and liabilities of those who were not in fact appealing from that decision of the Trial Court. Unless it is necessary in the interests of justice to give effect to the Appellate Court's decision by interfering in some way or other with the rights of those parties which are not the subject of appeal before the Appellate Court, the Appellate Court has no right whatever to interfere.

Rule 33 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to a case in which a plaintiff whose claim is decreed in part, prefers an appeal with regard to the part not decreed and the defendant files neither an appeal nor a cross-objection. In such a case it is not open to the Court of Appeal to enter into the question whether the plaintiff is entitled or not to any decree at all and to dismiss his suit in toto. *PAT KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. O. XLVII, r. 1—Review, grounds for—"Other sufficient reason," meaning of—Failure to refer to particular piece of evidence

The only ground upon which a review can be obtained according to O. XLVII, of the Civil Procedure Code is the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within the applicant's knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or the order made, or some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record or for any other sufficient reason.

The words "any other sufficient reason" in r. 1 of O. XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code mean a reason sufficient on grounds analogous to those specified immediately previously.

The mere fact that a Judge has not in terms referred to certain of the evidence in favour of one party or the other is not a sufficient reason entitling that party to come before the Court subsequently and seek to have a review of that judgment. *PAT RAGHU SINGH v. In every case the Court must determine upon the facts of that case whether relief against forfeiture is to be given or not.

Construction of document—Covenant to reconvey—Rule against perpetuities, applicability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 37, scope of.

The law in England and in India is substantially the same with regard to the enforcement of contracts in respect of lands; the only difference is that in England the owner of the equitable interest is considered as the owner of the property contracted to be conveyed. But no such result can follow from a contract creating an executory interest. If such a contract purports to do by indirect means what the law forbids to be done directly, it is void, and the principle is the same in India as in England.

Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption, which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties, and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The principle which underlies the rule against perpetuities applies to this class of contracts.

A covenant in a sale-deed that, "if the vendee, his heirs or representatives, desire to sell the house purchased, they shall, in such a case, first ask the executant, his heirs or representatives for the time being to purchase it. If the executant, or his heirs or representatives, refuse to purchase, the vendee, his heirs or representatives shall have a right to transfer it to some one else. In case they make breach of this covenant, the executant, his heirs and representatives will be entitled to the specific performance of the contract," offends against the rule against perpetuities and is, therefore, unenforceable.

Sale or mortgage—Surrounding circumstances.

In construing a document, surrounding circumstances may be taken into consideration in order to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts.

In August, 1908, A, a judgment-debtor, in order to prevent a Court Sale of his property, consisting of several villages, executed a document by which he purported to sell the property absolutely to B, with a condition of reconveyance. A, however, reserved his rights to the minerals in the land. The rents were to be enjoyed by B, from the date of purchase. The price paid was absurdly small, and the property would have fetched a larger sum even at public auction. Under a separate document expressed to be entered into for reconveyance of the property, B agreed to sell and A to purchase the villages for the amount paid for them on 31st August 1912, 31st August 1913, or 31st August 1914, and not earlier. In case A paid the sum to B, and a conveyance in due form was executed, he was to become entitled to the rents of the villages as from the date of payment. If before the deed of conveyance was executed, any portion of the land was acquired by Government, the compensation awarded was to be deemed equivalent to 20 years' rent of the land acquired, and both A and B

Contempt—Breach of undertaking given to Court

Penalty—Procedure—Undertaking to, pay deficit Court-fees, failure to, carry out—Appeal, maintainability of.

The breach of an undertaking given to the Court by a litigant, pending proceedings, on the faith of which the Court sanctions a particular course of action or inaction, is misconduct amounting to contempt.

When a person is guilty of such contempt, he places himself in a perilous situation so as not to be heard by the Court till he has purged his contempt.

But the rule imposing such a penalty is limited to the proceedings in which the contempt occurs.

Plaintiff's suit was held to have been undervalued and he undertook to make up the deficiency in Court-fees before the decree was drawn up. The Court, thereupon, proceeded to try the suit on the merits and it was eventually dismissed. The plaintiff failed and refused to carry out his undertaking with respect to the payment of deficit Court-fees. He preferred an appeal against the decree of the Trial Court with respect to costs.

Held, that the plaintiff was guilty of contempt and his appeal could not, therefore, be entertained. C RAJ KAVESWARI JIU v GATI KRIHNA, 39 O L J. 217, (1924) A. L R (O) 953 292

s. 16—Transaction, how should be considered—Undue influence—Onus—Urgent need of money—Usurious interest—Presumption, whether arises—Interpretation of Statutes—Reference to legislation of other countries.

The unconscionableness of a bargain is not the first thing to be considered in order to determine whether a case falls within the terms of section 16 of the Contract Act. The first thing to be considered is the relations of the parties and in order to bring the transaction within the section it must be proved that one party was in a position to dominate the will of the other.

The burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence then lies on the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other.

Urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not place the lender in a position to dominate his will.

The exaction of excessive and usurious interest does not by itself raise any presumption of undue influence until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will.

The question whether a bargain is unconscionable is to be settled by section 16 of the Contract Act and not by reference to the legislation of other countries, e.g., the English Money-lenders Act. It is accompanied with danger to invoke as authority in an Indian case expressions which merely connote the principles which underlie a particular English Statute, and form a guide to its interpretation.

It is not right that where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate. There is no such presumption until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will. P. O. RAGHUNATH PRASAD v. SARJU PRASAD, (1924) A. I. R.  Lien—Suit to recover purchase-money

Plaintiff sold 129 shares to defendant No. 1.
 Defendant sold 25 of these to a third party and pledged 104 along with 201 similar shares to defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 put forward defendant No. 3 as a party who was willing to advance money. In fact defendant No. 3 was a mere nominee of defendant No. 2. Defendant
 No. 2 got possession of these 305 shares by fraudulently representing that he would use their shares for the purpose of raising a loan for defendant No. 1 which he did not do and which he did not intend to do, his real object being to secure himself from loss as regards the moneys due to him by defendant No. 1. Plaintiff thereupon sued to recover the shares or their price and by way of damages the difference in the price of these shares on the date on which they were demanded back and the price on the date of decree.

Held, (1) that the plaintiff had no cause of action against defendants Nos. 2 and 3;

(2) that all that plaintiff was entitled to was a decree against defendant No. 1 for the unpaid purchase-money as he had no lien for it;

(3) that the plaintiff had no title either in law or in equity to the shares and could not get back the share certificates or claim damages.

Per Macleod, C. J.—Shares are goods within the meaning of section 76 of the Contract Act. They are, however, a peculiar kind of moveable property which cannot pass from hand to hand. The property in these shares belongs to the registered share-holder and cannot be transferred to another except according to the articles of the Company.

The only inquiry which a holder of shares can be put to by reason of the nature or character of the documents which come into his possession is with regard to the act of the registered holder.
 He cannot be put to enquiry with regard to the rights and liabilities of intermediate holders.

Per Crump, J.—Delivery of the transfers and share certificates passes not the property in the shares but a title legal and equitable which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares.

The measure of reasonableness as to the method

 as that laid down in section 91, Contract Act,

The granting of a decree for joint possession is quite discretionary with Courts.

A co-owner who has taken up the exclusive occupancy should not be deprived of such exclusive occupation except on very strong grounds.

The sole occupation of a part of the joint estate by one co-owner does not inevitably imply an ouster of the other co-owner, nor does the erection of substantial building by one co-owner upon a portion of joint property without the assent of the other co-owner constitute conclusive evidence of ouster.

What constitutes ouster in each particular case must depend upon its special facts.

Where one co-owner puts up a tapper on joint land without the consent of the other co-owner the Court will not order the demolition of the tapper unless the plaintiff proves special damage. N. KUVARAJA v. RAMA 432

In a suit by one co-owner for ejectment of a trespasser from the entire premises, the burden of proof lies on him to show that he had an unrestricted authority to eject him on the date of the suit. The mere fact that he had such authority at some point of time in the past is not sufficient to show that he continued to be clothed with that authority at the date of the suit, as to be alone entitled to call upon the defendant to vacate the entire premises, in spite of the fact that his other co-owner had manifested his in-

Ouster—Restoration of possession—Partition—Equity.

The equitable principle that one co-sharer cannot disturb possession of the other cannot be called in aid unless it is found that the co-sharers are in possession of separate portions by mutual arrangement for the sake of convenience. Unless such mutual arrangement is proved a co-sharer who is dispossessed cannot recover possession and his only remedy lies in a suit for partition. C EKABAR ALI SHAH v. KON ALI 31

Tenants-in-common—Exclusive occupation—Equitable principles—Decree for joint possession and mesne profits

If there be two or more tenants-in-common and one of them A be in actual occupation of part of the estate and engaged in cultivating that part in a proper course of cultivation as if it were his separate property, and another tenant-in-common B attempts to come upon the said part for the purpose of carrying on operations there inconsistent with the course of cultivation in which A is engaged and the profitable use by him of the said part, and A resists and prevents such entry, not in denial of B's title, but simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable enjoyment of the land, such conduct on the part of A would not entitle B to a decree for joint possession.

Prima facie, co-owners are entitled to hold joint possession of joint property and consequently if one co-sharer seeks to defeat the claim of another co-sharer to joint possession to joint property, special circumstances must be alleged and established so as to justify exclusive occupation of the joint property by one of the co-sharers.

The mere setting up of a rival claim of a hostile title in the written statement would not entitle the plaintiff to allege that there was ouster and, on that footing, to seek for a decree for joint possession. It must be proved that there was a setting up of hostile title or ouster prior to the filing of the written statement.

—Meaning of word "place" in definition of "mill"—Inspector of Cotton Excise—Right of free access to godown—Owner refusing to have locked-up godown opened—Wulful obstruction—Subsequent offer of access, whether condones obstruction.

Cotton Duties Act—conold.

Under section 16 of the Cotton Duties Act, the Inspector of Cotton Excise has a right of free access to the godown of a mill, inasmuch as the definition of the word "mill" in the Act containing the wide word "place", which (supposing the godown is not in the particular building where the machinery is) is wide enough to cover the premises containing accessories to the manufacture of cotton goods in the mill.

Therefore, if the owner of a mill does not, after due notice, get the locked door of a godown of the mill opened to give access to the Inspector of Cotton Excise, the owner is guilty of wilful obstruction under section 25 (9) of the Cotton Duties Act, the particular purposes for which the Inspector wanted access being immaterial so long as his object was to perform a duty under the Cotton Duties Act.

Once access is refused, and thus intentional obstruction is caused, a subsequent offer to give access is not sufficient to condone the obstruction. B MUKUNDAL BANSHILAL v. EMPEROR, 26 Bom. L. R. 721, (1924) A. I. R. (B.) 492, 25 Cr. L. J. 1281 353

Sch. I, Arts. 4, 5—Bengal Court Fees (Amendment) Act (IV of 1922), s. 5—'Leviable', meaning of—Review, application for—Court-fee payable—Fiction, legal, when permissible.

A legal fiction has no place where substantial justice does not require its interference, still less where substantial justice would suffer from its operation. The Court will not endure that a mere form or fiction of law, introduced for the sake of justice, should work a wrong, contrary to the real truth and substance of the thing.

The use of the term "leviable" in Article 5 of Schedule I to the Court Fees Act does not justify the inference that the Legislature intended to introduce a fiction into the law, namely, an imaginary representation of the plaintiff or memorandum of appeal at the time when the application for review is filed.

As soon as a suit has been instituted, the amount of Court-fee payable on a possible application for review of the prospective judgment in the suit becomes fixed.

Neither under the Court Fees Act as originally framed in 1870 nor under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1922, can a petitioner for review of judgment be called upon to pay Court-fee, on the basis of the fee which would be payable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal if it were to be filed on the date of the application for review. The amount must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable (which, in the normal course of events, is the fee actually levied) on the plaint or memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the plaint or memorandum was filed in Court. C. The object of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is not the punishment of a suspect for past unproved crimes but to prevent him from committing offences and to afford him an opportunity of reforming himself.

When once a Magistrate has, while passing orders under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, imposed conditions as to the nature of sureties and the amount of their liability, he cannot, when making the order absolute under section 118 of the Code, vary his previous order and impose fresh conditions, and he cannot reject as unfit sureties who comply with conditions originally laid down and are not personally unfit.

s. 144, object of—Liberty of individual, respect for—Magistrate, duty of—Proper procedure—Vague and indefinite order

Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is not intended to restrict the liberty of an individual if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of any act to be done by him.

The object of section 144 is to enable a Magistrate in cases of emergency to make an immediate order for the purpose, of preventing an imminent breach of the peace, but it is not intended to relieve him of the duty of making a proper enquiry, into the circumstances which make it likely that such breach of the peace will occur.

If it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence thereat and to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is, not to continue to deprive the first person of the exercise of his legal right but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal right.

An order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, merely reciting that in the opinion of the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding under that section does not sufficiently comply with the requirements of the law.

A vague and indefinite order which does not state any facts relating to the case or does not define the limits within which it is to operate is bad in law. PAT BLONG v EMPEROR, (1924) Pat. 262, 25 Cr L J 1178, (1924) A I R (Pat) 767 42

The words "parties concerned in such dispute" in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are intended to include all persons claiming to be in possession, and proceedings under the section are not without jurisdiction merely because some of those parties are not likely to cause a breach of the peace.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

The mere fact that in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a compromise is filed by some of the parties does not preclude the Magistrate from putting such parties into possession, although it may be that if all the parties filed a compromise the jurisdiction of the Magistrate would cease and he could only cancel the proceedings under clause (6) of the section.

In questioning the effect of proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, as regards limitation, for the civil suit under Art 47 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, the proceedings must be shown to be without jurisdiction in the strictest sense of the term. It is not every error which would make the result invalid, and before want of jurisdiction can be established, a vice must be clearly established which infects the whole proceedings.

An order in mutation proceedings is not a final decision as to ownership and has no effect whatsoever on an order passed by a Magistrate in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in so far as that order limits the period within which a civil suit may be brought by any of the parties. O ABADI BEGAM v AHMAD MIRZA BAO 691

Under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute and it is his duty to collect information about possession whether false or true and to sift it before making use of section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, as an order under this section is almost the same as an act of confiscation. PAT RAM BAHAL SINGH v RANG BAHADUR SINGH, 5 P L T. 569, 25 Cr L J. 1295, (1923) A I R (Pat) 804 367

The words "competent Court" in section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not confined to mean only a "competent Civil Court."

An order of a Revenue Court directing mutation to be made in favour of a certain person is an order of a competent Court determining the person entitled to possession within the meaning of section 146 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. *A RAM SRI v. proceeds of the goods belonging to the Company. The C I D. Officer appointed to investigate into the matter, obtained a search warrant from a First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad for the books and documents, came to Calcutta and in execution thereof took charge of the books, etc from the house and office of D after making a search list. Having arrested D under the provisions of section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he produced him before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, asking that D might be forwarded under proper escort to the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad. On D applying for bail the Chief Presidency Magistrate granted bail for Rs. 50,000 "to appear before the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad" on the date specified. D thereupon moved the High Court.

Held, (1) that the charge was triable only in Calcutta where the offence alleged under section 403, Penal Code, was committed.

(2) that the Chief Presidency Magistrate ought to have refused to act on the mere statement of the investigating Police Officer but should have required him to produce a warrant from Ahmedabad, releasing D in the meantime on bail to appear when called on before himself. C DWARKANATH HARIDAS v AMBALAL GANPATRAM, 28 O W N 850, 25 Cr L J 1203, (1924) A I R (O) 893 131

Where a Magistrate instituting proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, takes cognizance of the offence himself without informing the accused under section 191 of the Code that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court, the omission is more than a mere irregularity and vitiates the whole trial. O EMPEROR v NAIPAL, 10 O & A L R 735, 11 O L J. 532, 25 Cr L J 1224, (1924) A I R (O) 448 162

It is only when the contradictory statements in respect of which a prosecution for perjury is instituted, constitute a "series of acts" that an alternative charge can be framed under section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The series of acts referred to in section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code implies two or more acts connected by some more intimate relation than that of mere consecutiveness of time.

Two contradictory statements recorded in two utterly unconnected cases, the accused being at the time when he gave one deposition, an approver, in the Sessions Court, and when he gave the second, a defendant in a civil suit, cannot form the basis of an alternative charge of perjury.

An application for sanction to prosecute, filed under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, before the amendment of the Code in 1923, remained pending in the lower Court till sometime after the Code was amended. Then the District Court, to which the lower Court was subordinate, acting under section 476A ordered prosecution under section 476 of the Code.

Held, that, as the pendency of the application for sanction did not mean rejection of the application within the meaning of section 476A, the District Court was competent to order prosecution. B. RAMDAS VISHNUDAS v. EMPEROR, 26 Bom. L. R. 713, (1924) A. I. R. (B) 511, 25 Cr. L. J. 1287 359 ss. 209, 253, 436—Inquiry preliminary to commitment—Accused, when to be committed—Magistrate, duty of—Order discharging accused, reasons for—Sessions Judge, powers of.

A Magistrate is not compelled to commit to Sessions any case in which he considers that conviction is impossible.

A Magistrate must however exercise a proper discretion in ordering the discharge of any person charged with an offence triable only by a Court of Session. It is not enough for the Magistrate merely to doubt some portions of the prosecution evidence. He must be satisfied that the prosecution will fail and utterly fail in the Sessions Court.

The report made to the Police of a dacoity mentioned, among others, one C but the senior investigating officer dropped proceedings against C, and certain other persons were committed to Sessions and convicted. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner passed an order directing that the charge against C be enquired into and dealt with according to law. The Magistrate who held the enquiry, after recording the prosecution evidence, discharged C, but the Sessions Judge set aside the order of discharge and committed C to Sessions. C filed a petition of revision.

Held, that in the face of the Judicial Commissioner's order directing that the accused should be put on his trial, the Magistrate was ill-advised in refusing to commit the accused to Sessions, and that it was a case in which a definite pronouncement should be given by the Court empowered to try the offence with which the accused was charged. *O. ss. 209, 437, 439—Magistrate refusing to charge accused with offence triable by Court of Session—Discharge or acquittal—District Magistrate's order of committal to Sessions, legality of—Revisional powers, exercise of.

Certain persons were charged before a Magistrate of the First Class under sections 424 and 508, Part II, of the Penal Code and acquitted. Subsequently the complainant made several applications to him to frame a charge against the accused under section 395, Penal Code, and commit the accused to the Court of Session. The Magistrate put the applications on record but declined to entertain them. The complainant, thereupon, moved the District Magistrate who acting under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, framed a charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Court of Session. On its being contended, on revision, that the order of the District Magistrate was illegal on the ground that the accused had been acquitted and not discharged.

Held, that the order of the Magistrate was in substance an order discharging the accused in respect of an alleged offence under section 395, Penal Code, and that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order sought to be revised.

Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a revisional Court, it will neither enquire into the reasons nor interfere with the exercise of the discretion. S. KHANU v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1368. 750 ss. 233, 537—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 140, 326—Charge under ss. 326, 149, Penal Code—Conviction under s. 326—Legality—Prejudice.

When a charge has been framed under sections 326, 149, Penal Code, a conviction under section 326 is not necessarily bad but it depends on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge.

Obiter dicta—Section 149, Penal Code, creates no offence, but is, like section 34, merely declaratory of a principle of the common law, and its object is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand which actually committed the offence. A person could not be tried and sentenced under section 149 alone, as no punishment is provided by the section. Therefore, the omission of section 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge.

When a person is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly, one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object, there is no necessary implication that that particular member is not himself. *M. Where an accused person has been tried for and convicted of an offence under section 325, Penal Code, on the charge that he himself struck blows to another person which resulted in the latter's death, but the witnesses against him are disbelieved by the Court of Appeal and, therefore, his conviction cannot be upheld on that charge, the Court cannot alter the charge and maintain his conviction by reading section 34, Penal Code, with section 325, on the ground that some member of the party of the accused, though not the accused himself, had struck blows to the deceased in pursuance of the common intention of the party, even if there is evidence to this effect on the record, nor can the case be sent back for re-trial, under section 325 read with section 31, as such a course would mean inviting the Court below to believe on the amended charge the very witnesses who are held by the Appellate Court to have committed deliberate perjury against the accused in stating that he had struck blows to the deceased. *A CHIDDA SINGH v. One of the two persons stated by the prosecution to be the ring-leaders of an affray which was the subject of the trial pleaded alibi and asked permission to call a certain witness to prove it. This witness wrote to the Court stating his inability to attend on account of ill-health and sent medical certificate to that effect. On the date of the hearing the accused applied to the Court for the issue of a Commission to examine this witness at his house. The Magistrate was of opinion that the case being important, the witness should be examined in Court and as it was not known when the witness would be well enough to attend the Court, he dismissed the application.

Held, (1) that some effort should have been made to ascertain as to whether it would, within a reasonable time, be possible for the witness to come to Court and if not then to take the evidence on Commission.

(2) that the Magistrate, therefore, should now take this evidence, if possible, and re-consider in the light of this evidence the case of all the accused before him. PAT JAMUNA SINGH v. EMPEROR, 3 Pat. 501, 25 Or. L. J. 1255 268

s. 263—Scope of—Summary trial of appealable case—Charge not framed—Conviction, legality of.

Section 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code is restricted in its application to cases in which no appeal lies, and exempts a Magistrate from framing a charge in such cases. But in a case tried summarily in which the sentence passed is appealable, there is no such exemption. The conviction of a person, therefore, in such a case without framing a charge is illegal. *C. The real test that has to be applied in a Reference under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the Jury, is to see whether the verdict is so unreasonable that even reasonable men could not have arrived at that verdict.

The High Court will not, therefore, interfere in a case unless it can be said that it was not possible for the Jury to have arrived at the verdict at which they did arrive. O. EMPEROR v. GOLAM KADER, 28 O. W. N. 876, 25 Or. L. J. 1284, (1924) A I R. (C) 956 356

In giving due weight to the opinion of the Jury the High Court should always hesitate to reverse a unanimous verdict unless it holds it to be unreasonable. C. EMPEROR v. SAGARMAL, 26 C. W. N. 847, 40 O. L. J. 135; 25 Cr. L. J. 1217, (1924) A. I. R. (C) 960. 145

Under section 339, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, as amended in 1923, the certificate by the Public Prosecutor that in his opinion the approver has not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made, is a condition precedent to the validity of trial of the approver. But this does not apply to a case in which the pardon had been declared forfeited by the Magistrate and the proceedings against the approver, after the forfeiture, commenced before the amended section came into force.

The words "the statement made by a person who has accepted the tender of pardon" in subsection (2) of section 339 of the Code are wide enough to cover a statement before the pardoning Magistrate.

It is not, however, fair to use such statements of approver against him unless they are put to him in his examination as accused person and he is asked if he has any explanation to offer regarding them. N. GANGARAM v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1355. 715

A High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application under section 497 (5) or section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code against an order granting bail, passed by a Sessions Judge in a case pending before a Subordinate Magistrate. The powers of the High Court under section 497 (5) of the Code are restricted to the cases of persons released by the Trial Magistrate; and those under section 498 enable the High Court to release an accused on bail but not to order the arrest and commission to custody of

Judge.

But proceedings in which it is of has been determined whether bail from the accused person should be taken or not fall within the definition of "any proceedings" under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the High Court has powers under that section to interfere and thus to control the propriety as well as the regularity of orders in such proceedings.

At any rate, the High Court can interfere with an order granting bail passed by a Sessions

561-A, Criminal Procedure Code.

The High Court has powers under section 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code to order the expunging of passages in the order of a Sessions

Judge granting bail if such passages are likely

of the case. N. LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. GULAM JILANI, 25 Cr. L. J. 1333. 755.

A sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment on a youthful first offender aged 14 years for an offence of dishonestly receiving stolen property, under section 111, Penal Code, is improper, and where in lieu of this sentence the offender has been ordered to be detained in a Reformatory School, the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order for detention. Pat Jagannath Chaudhary v. Emperor, (1923) A. I. R. (Pat.) 997, 1 P. L. R. 177 Cr., 25 Or. L. J. 1312 480

s. 439—Revision against acquittal—Interference, when justified—Police report, use of—Final report of investigating officer used without examining him, effect of—Error of law—Ground for setting aside acquittal. The power of interference in revision with a judgment of acquittal is sparingly exercised and ordinarily only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. But it is neither possible nor expedient to lay down general principles. The High Court will interfere where circumstances require it. The final report and diary of an investigating officer, who was not called as a prosecution witness, might be used to suggest means of further elucidating points which needed clearing up but only of elucidating them by legal evidence. The use of such a report as evidence is an error in law but it is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal. An error of procedure of a grave character would afford ground for interference but not a mere error of improper admission of evidence, which was not essential to the result which might have been come to wholly independently of it. Pat Ganga Singh v. Rambhajan Singh, 25 Or. L. J. 1366. 274

s. 439—Revision—High Court, power of to quash pending proceeding, exercise of. The High Court has power to quash a criminal proceeding in its early stages before any evidence has been recorded, but this is a power which will be only exercised in exceptional cases. Per Cunning, J.—The High Court has the power of interfering with criminal cases whilst they are still pending before the subordinate Courts, but the exercise of this power is sometimes fraught with considerable danger to the due administration of criminal justice. If parties are to be allowed to come up at every and any stage, the criminal prosecution to challenge the order of the Magistrate, a very powerful weapon is at once placed in the hand of the well-to-do to defeat the ends of justice and to protract indefinitely a criminal trial.

It is for the Magistrate before whom the case is pending to determine whether the facts proved or the facts alleged do or do not constitute a criminal offence. The accused party has then his remedy by way of appeal or revision, when the case has been finally decided.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—It is the bounden duty of the High Court to interfere with a proceeding pending in a subordinate Court when it is brought to its notice that a person has been subjected, or is about to be subjected, to the harassment of an illegal prosecution. O. Nripendra Bhuyan v. Gobinda Bandhu, 39 O. L. J. 236, 25 Or. L. J. 1268; (1924) A. I. R. (O.) 1018. 266

s. 439—Revision—Incorrect view of evidence. Ordinarily the Judicial Commissioner's Court does not interfere in revision in criminal cases where the only question to be decided is whether the lower Court has not taken a correct view of the evidence.

The principle falsus in uno falsus in omnibus cannot be universally applied in India. O. Prasad v. Emperor, 10 O. & A. L. R. 871; 25 Or. L. J. 1189. 33

s. 439—Security for good behaviour—Failure to furnish security—Order directing imprisonment of accused—Revision—High Court, when will interfere. See CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, s. 110. 36

s. 439—Two persons tried together—One person acquitted and other convicted—Appeal by convicted person—Appellate Court's right to express opinion against acquitted person—Remarks, expunging of. In disposing of the appeal of one of two co-accused, who were tried together, and one of whom was acquitted, the Appellate Court has no right to make use of expressions which amount to a finding that the acquitted accused was wrongly acquitted. Once a person is tried and acquitted of an offence by due process of law and no appeal is preferred against his acquittal, he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge upon which he was tried, and a Court superior to that which tried him has no right to express the opinion that he is in fact guilty although acquitted by the Trial Court. The High Court will not allow such expressions to remain on record. L. Abdul Aziz v. Emperor, 25 Cr. L. J. 1245. 173

s. 439, cl. (1), (5)—Appeal competent—Revision—High Court, whether can interfere on its own motion. When an appeal lies against any criminal proceedings but no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision can be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, having regard to section 439 (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and if proceedings by way of revision are instituted by such a party, the High Court cannot interfere even on its own motion under clause (1) of that section. *S. An application, under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, by the mother of a child against the father of the child for the "educational expenses" of the child, should be made by her in the name of the child as the guardian of the child and not in her own name.

The "educational expenses" of a child do not come within the term "maintenance", as used in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

Obiter—The object of proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy, and that object is attained by the provision of lodging, food and clothing. A husband is bound to maintain his wife but he is not bound to do more than supply her with lodging, food and clothing, he is not bound to maintain her "as his wife." A KUMAR v EMPEROR, 25 Cr L J 1249 257

s. 488—Order for maintenance, form of—Magistrate, whether can direct separate residence for wife

Under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Magistrate is not allowed to make any other order except a monthly cash allowance.

An order directing the husband to give his wife 12 maunds of grain each harvest and to provide her with a separate house is illegal. L. ARRU v MAHOU, 25 Cr L J 1271 279

The weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever and always binding on the Magistrate or that his discretion is never fettered.

Where in an application for maintenance under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code it appeared that some 13 months before the application the husband had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights but soon after taking the wife to his house had turned her out with blows.

Held, that the Magistrate was justified in exercising his discretion in favour of the woman and

s. 520—Sessions Judge's power to vary order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed in appeal—Courts of Appeal, Revision, Reference, or Confirmation, what are.

A Sessions Court has no power under section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, to vary or revise an order of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed in appeal against a conviction by a Sub-Magistrate, as in respect of such orders, the Sessions Court is neither a Court of Appeal or Revision nor a Court of Reference or Confirmation.

A Court of Reference means a Court to which references are made and which on reference is entitled to go into the matters and dispose of them. M SOMU PILLAI v KRISHNA PILLAI, 47 M. L J 481, 20 L W. 521, (1924) M. W. N. 506, 25 Cr L J 1247; (1924) A. I R. (M) 899 175

s. 526—Complainant or his Pleader disallowed to examine witnesses—Court examining witnesses itself—Reasonable apprehension—Transfer of case

Generally, it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses, and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the Pleaders, to be dealt with as is provided for in section 138 of the Evidence Act or in section 495, sub-section (3), of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Where a Magistrate does not permit the complainant or his Pleader to examine his witnesses but proceeds to examine them himself, the procedure adopted by him is one that is likely to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that he will not obtain a fair trial in his Court, and constitutes a sufficient ground for transfer of the case to some other Court. O. JANKI v SHRO NARAIN SINGH, 10 O & A L R 342; 11 O L J 333, 25 Cr L J 1226, (1924) A. I R. (O) 371 154

s. 526—Expression of opinion by District Magistrate in favour of accused—Transfer of case

A complaint was lodged against A and certain other persons on a charge of murder in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of a District. Within a few days of the alleged occurrence, the District Magistrate in a public speech addressed to the Sub-Divisional Officer and other officials referred to the high services of A and the baselessness of the charges made against him.

Held, that the speech amounted to a decided opinion about the charges in question and was likely to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that he will not have a fair and impartial trial and that it was expedient

s. 526—Transfer—Magistrate, cross-examining witnesses and disallowing questions of complainant—Reasonable apprehension of not receiving justice.

A Magistrate should not cross-examine frequently the prosecution witnesses, nor should he disallow as irrelevant the questions which the complainant may wish to put to defence witnesses with a view to show their partiality. However, even if he acts in such a manner, it cannot be held that his conduct gives rise to a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that his case will not receive a fair trial at the hands of the Magistrate. *O. s. 537—Charge, frame of—Defect in form—Prejudice to accused—Defect, whether cured.

A charge stating that the accused did a particular act in order to commit a certain offence "or any other offence punishable with imprisonment" is improper as the accused should know the specific offence with which he is charged.

When, however, the accused does not suffer any prejudice the defect in the form of the charge is curable by the provisions of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. C. BALARAM KUNDU v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1186. 50

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Before applying section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Court must consider whether there is a good case for its application or not, and must guard against two things, viz.—one, danger to the public and the other, danger to the accused himself, which may result from the applicability of the section.

Where a juvenile offender has shown criminality rather than mere thoughtlessness, and a general character of craft and deceit, section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be applied. S. DARYALAL v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1224. 152

Alienation—Alienation by non-proprietor of site of house—Sahali, Kalan, Tahsil Tara Taran, District Amritsar—Sale, proof of, effect of

There is no custom in the village of Sahali Kalan in the Tara Taran Tahsil of the Amritsar District whereby a non-proprietary resident has an unrestricted power to dispose of the site on which his house is built.

As regards sales by non-proprietors in a village, proof of particular sales having taken place without objection would be very good evidence of the title of the purchaser to the lands actually sold. But while such sales would give a good title to individuals in particular portions of the village site, they would not prove that the rights of the proprietary body over the remainder of the site had been extinguished, and that possession whether by proprietors or non-proprietors had come to be the only measure of right. *L. Where there is an entry in favour of a custom of pre-emption in the waqf-ul-arz of a village prepared at the last settlement, the presumption raised by the entry cannot be rebutted by the circumstance that there is an express entry as to freedom of transfer in the waqf-ul-arz of one of the other mahals, which was carved out of the original village prior to the settlement, for it may well be that the co-sharers of the other mahal had agreed to abrogate the custom which might have been in existence from before.

The rule that the grantor cannot derogate from his grant, does not operate in a case where the transaction is expressly forbidden by Statute.

There is no estoppel on a point of law.

There is no rule of law which can prevent a party from asking the Court to hold that a particular transaction which, as a matter of fact, is invalid should be held to be invalid. In fact, it is the duty of the Court as soon as the invalidity of a transaction is pointed out, if it is satisfied that there is such an invalidity, to set aside the transaction. *N. KESARAI v. A statement by a girl, alleging that she was raped, made immediately after the rape, to witnesses who saw her crying and asked her the reason thereof, is admissible, as an explanation of her act of crying, under section 8 of the Evidence Act, as also under section 157 of the said Act by way of corroboration.

In the case of the rape of an innocent girl of tender age, the evidence of the ravished girl is of great value and where she makes a statement by way of disclosure immediately after the occasion, it is a strong piece of evidence corroborating her credibility and proving the consistence of her conduct and also as negativing consent on her part.

In a case of rape the punishment should be proportioned to the greater or less atrocity of the crime, to the conduct of the criminal and to the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female, whether she is a low native or a high European. N SOORAJAL v EMPEROOR, 25 Or L J 1214. 142

Procedure Code, that there was an inquiry into the matter and that there was a decision adverse to the allegations of the plaintiff, is a relevant fact and is admissible in evidence on general principles as well as under section 13 of the Evidence Act.

In order to establish title by adverse possession in favour of one co-sharer against another, it must be established by unambiguous evidence that there was a complete ouster to the knowledge of the co-sharer. That is to say, the possession of one co-sharer can be said to be adverse against another only if there is an open denial of title and limitation can run, if at all, only from that date.

Defendant replied by a letter which contained an admission that he was a monthly tenant. In answer to a suit for ejectment filed by the plaintiff, defendant set up a plea that he was entitled to six months' notice under section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, that the statement contained in the defendant's letter that he was a monthly tenant did not operate as an estoppel, inasmuch as

(a) the facts affecting the tenancy were within the knowledge of both parties, and

(b) plaintiff did not alter his position with reference to the subject-matter of the statement. B WILLIAM JACKS & Co v. JOORAB MAHOMED, 25 Bom. L. R. 1170, (1924) A. I. R. (B) 115; 48 B. 38. 791

—s. 115—Estoppel—Lease by rayyat—Recital that grantee shall be rayyat, effect of—Ejectment

Plaintiffs granted a lease to the predecessor-in-title of the defendants for a term of twenty years which recited that the grantee would have the status of a rayyat. The grantee continued in possession till after the expiry of the term and after his death the defendants got into possession of the tenancy. Plaintiffs sued to eject the defendants on the allegation that the tenancy was not heritable, the grantee being an under-rayyat, as the grantors themselves were only rayyats.

Held, (1) that the grantee having acted on the faith of the recital in the grant that he would have the status of a rayyat the plaintiffs were estopped from contending that his status was other than what was described in the grant;

(2) that, therefore, the defendants were not liable to ejectment. C ISWAR CHANDRA NATH v. GOUR SUNDAR NATH, (1923) A. I. R. (C) 608, 39 C. L. J. 337. 90

The mere mutation of the name of a person in place of that of a deceased under-proprietor in respect of certain land, followed by acceptance of rent from him by the proprietor, without any inquiry as to his title, does not operate as an estoppel against the proprietor.

The law of estoppel is compendiously set forth in section 115, Evidence Act, under which, it is necessary that the person sought to be estopped should have intentionally caused or permitted the other party to believe a certain thing to be true and to act upon that belief. *P O MITRA SBN SINGH v. Under section 167 of the Evidence Act, the improper admission of evidence is not ground of itself for a reversal of any decision if it appears to the Court that, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision.

A Court competent to deal with facts should ignore the evidence wrongly admitted and consider whether there still remains sufficient evidence to support the judgment.

If this has not been done, the High Court on revision will ordinarily remand the case, for a finding with reference to admissible evidence only. M. KURUBA SANKARA v. KILLI MANAPPA 283

Foreign judgment—Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court—Power-of-attorney to appear, if amounts to submission—Ex parte foreign decree, whether decision on merits—Notice—Service.

Where a person executes a power-of-attorney in favour of another empowering the latter to conduct litigation on behalf of the former in foreign Courts, there is a contract binding him to appear in those Courts which amounts to submission to the jurisdiction of such foreign Courts.

An ex parte decree obtained in a foreign Court in a summary suit similar to that provided for by O. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code, must be deemed to be a decree passed upon the merits when no appearance has been put in on behalf of the defendant.

Ex parte decrees are by no means necessarily decrees not passed upon the merits. It is only when a defence has been raised and for some reason or another has not been adjudicated upon that the decision can be said to be not upon the merits.

Where a foreign Court has held that notice to a defendant was sufficient, that decree must be taken to be correct in the absence of any other evidence to the contrary.

No question as to any irregularity in the service of notice can be raised in the Courts of this country as a ground for questioning the validity of a foreign decree. M. JANOTHASAN v. MAHAMAD OMUTHU, 47 M. L. J. 356; 20 L. W. 877; 47 M. 877. 425

Guardian and minor—Debt due from Hindu father to minor—Pro-note by sons—Suit by guardian on debt—Decree against father—Dismissal against sons—Omission to file pro-note, whether gross negligence—Later suit by minor to re-open first suit, whether maintainable

Where a suit is brought by the guardian of a minor against a Hindu father and his sons based upon their ordinary liability under the Hindu Law, in respect of a debt borrowed by the father for an alleged necessity, purposefully withholding a pro-note executed by the sons in favour of the minor plaintiff undertaking to share their liability, with a view to get a decree against all the members of the joint Hindu family, and the suit is decreed only against the father, the minor cannot on attaining majority re-open the case against the sons on the basis of pro-note on the ground that the guardian in the previous suit had been guilty of gross negligence in keeping back the pro-note. M. TUMMALAPALLI ANJANAYULU v. PRADARANGANTI, CHINNA SUBBIAH, 20 L. W. 529, (1924) M. W. N. 758, (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 860 952

Where a mortgage is made by a certificated guardian of a minor with the sanction of the District Judge recorded under section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act, that sanction is prima facie evidence that the transaction is justified and is sufficient to relieve the creditor of the necessity of making any inquiry as to its being for legal necessity.

It is the duty of the Court to which an application is made under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act for sanction of the sale of minor's property, to satisfy itself by inquiry that the transaction is necessary and is for the minor's benefit, and a creditor is entitled to rely on an order of sanction as evidence that the Court has satisfied itself on this point and that the transaction is a proper one.

The mere omission to recite the necessity in an order granting sanction, as required by section 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act, is no more than an irregularity and it does not render the sanction altogether illegal. A. BUNDHOO v. SHRI CHARAN, 23 A. L. J. 851; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 875 328

Gujarat Taluqdars' Act (VI of 1888), as amended by Act II of 1905, s. 2 (1) (a)—Gameti, rights of—Mulgameti, definition of—Sovereign rights, whether essential—Cession of territory—Rights against sovereign how exercised—Burden of proving enforceable right—Taluqdars' estate.

Although the Kathis of village Salangpur in the Dhanduka Taluka of District Ahmedabad are Mulgametis by reason of their retention of the jvat lands and chaath, they do not hold lands directly from Government and consequently are not taluqdars within the meaning of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888, as amended by the Act of 1905.

Per Marten, J.—Generally speaking a Gameti would have sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights but a retention of such sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights is not essential to constitute a Mulgameti.

It is sufficient if the Gameti retains or is re-granted some of his former lands or an interest therein although all his former governing rights pass to others.

A Mulgamel of Salangpur is one who is or is descended from, a former ruler and owner of the village and still retains by re-grant or otherwise some portion of the lands, or interests therein of such former ruler and owner, but not necessarily any of his governing rights.

After a cession of territory to British Rule the only enforceable rights against the Sovereign are those conferred by him after the cession either by agreement, express or implied or by legislation. An implied agreement conferring rights may be established by evidence of recognition of rights existing before cession, and of an election express or implied to be bound by them, but the burden of establishing the existence of an enforceable right is upon the subject.

There is no legal presumption of legal necessity in favour of an alienation of property by a Hindu widow when the reversioners who consent to the alienation are ladies or distant relations.

The value to be attached to a recital in a sale-deed as to the existence of legal necessity for the sale depends upon the circumstances of the case. If the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry as to the existence of necessity would have confirmed the truth of the representation made by the vendor, then, when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. *A. Hindu Law—contd.

* A Hindu son when he is born in a family is born to all the rights which exist at the time in the family and not to rights which existed in the family a century before. No title derived from a Hindu would be safe under such a contingency.

A son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sue. The cause of action to contest an alienation of joint family property accrues after the alienation when the purchaser takes possession, and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family.

An after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer and as he was not born on that date and was under no disability he cannot obtain the benefit of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act. He can take advantage of any cause of action existing at his birth and sue within the period of limitation but cannot start a fresh period at his birth. A SIKANDAR SINGH v. BAGICHU PANDE 307 surviving co-parceners, even in the absence of any specific authority from her husband, during the lifetime of the co-parcener, it does not necessarily follow that even after the death of the last surviving co-parcener, when the joint family has ceased and the property has devolved upon the heirs of the last surviving co-parcener, she can make a valid adoption, so as to divest the estate already vested in the heirs of the last male owner.

Mitakshara—Impartible estates—Principle of survivorship, how far applicable—Alienability of impartible estates; evidence of—Settlement khewats, relevancy of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 102, 103—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Co-parcenary in impartible properties—Right to maintenance—Evidence as to usage of family, nature of—Independent opinion.

The principle of survivorship which governs succession in ordinary joint family under the Mitakshara has to be followed in the case of impartible estates only for a particular purpose, viz., to find out a successor and it is only for the purpose of determining who is entitled to succeed, that the estate is to be treated as the property of the joint family.

In the absence of any custom an impartible estate is alienable by way of transfer inter vivos, as well as by testamentary dispositions.

If according to Hindu Law an impartible Raj is not alienable the burden of proving that by custom the estate is inalienable is on the person who alleges it to be inalienable.

In considering evidence of inalienability it should be seen that if there was any occasion, when having regard to human nature, there was likelihood of alienation and alienation was not effected, it would be evidence of inalienability.

The right to maintenance, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary, begins where co-parcenary begins and ceases where co-parcenary ceases.

It is admissible for a living witness to state his opinion on the existence of a family custom and to state as the ground of that opinion information derived from deceased persons. The weight of such evidence would depend on the position and the character of the witness and of the persons on whose statements he formed his opinion. It must be the expression of independent opinion based on hearsay and not mere repetition of hearsay.

Entries in Settlement khewats are presumed to be correct under section 103, Bengal Tenancy Act. Even if they do not come under section 102 of the Act, they are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act, being made by a public officer in the discharge of official duties. *C. Mitakshara—Succession—"Sons", meaning of—Grandson of father's sister, whether bandhu.

A grandson of father's sister is a bandhu and as such within the heritable line.

Per Kanhaya Lal, J—Bandhus are sapindas though of a different gotra.

A bandhu must, in order to be heritable in a female line, fall within the fifth degree from the common male ancestor and must be so related to the deceased person that they are mutually sapindas of one another.

Per *Mukerji, J—*Where a bandhu is related to the deceased through his father seven degrees have to be counted and not five. It is only when the claimant is connected with the deceased through his mother that five degrees have to be counted.

Religious endowment—Shebait's appointment—Succession—Rules—Additional endowment—Indication—Shebait's position—Shebait's office, whether transferable—Gift in favour of co-shebait, validity of.

The appointment and succession, to the office of a shebait must follow the line laid down in the original grant and in the absence of special direction and usage the heirs of the donor succeed.

A donor is at liberty to alter the appointment of a shebait to the office, or the rules regulating the worship, except on the ground that he has expressly precluded himself from doing so or that such an alteration affects some right of property of the shebait so appointed or the right of a third party which had already been created, provided always that any such alterations do not affect any of the fundamental gifts.

All the shebaits if they agree, and if it is for the benefit of the endowment, may introduce changes without changing the rules of the founder in any vital matter.

Additional endowments, if allowed, must be accepted with the terms and conditions in the deed but subject always to the limitation that such endowments are for the benefit of the Thakur and the new rules are not inconsistent with the rules already made.

The right of a pujari of a Thakur is not that of a shebait and he is merely a servant appointed by the shebait for the performance of the ceremonies.

A dedication to a Thakur is irrevocable. The rules laid down for the worship of a Thakur and for the management of the charities, if any, connected with the endowment are binding.

The rules laid down for the appointment of shebaits and their succession in the deed of endowment are binding.

A shebait has no right to the property but is merely an officer with the rights and limitations of a guardian of a minor.

Hindu Law—contd

The rules laid down in a deed of endowment are binding and are unalterable after the death of the donor by any successor in estate or office.

The office of a shebait is not transferable either by sale or gift.

A gift in favour of a co-shebait is not invalid provided it is for the benefit of the endowment.

Relinquishment of limited estate, proof of—Failure to contest suit, effect of—Procedure—Events during pendency of suit, whether can be considered.

The representatives of a deceased Hindu claimed certain kashi land belonging to the latter on the allegation that his daughter, who was immediately entitled to the property and was a defendant in the suit, had relinquished the property in their favour. The contest was between the plaintiffs and the landlord. The daughter, of the deceased did not enter appearance or contest the suit. There was no evidence of a relinquishment by her before the suit, but during the appellate stage she filed a petition expressing her willingness to relinquish her rights in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, (1) that the failure of the daughter of the deceased to appear and contest the suit did not amount to a relinquishment.

(2) that the petition filed by her before the Appellate Court did not affect the position of the parties, as the judgment of the Court must depend upon the rights of the parties at the date when the suit was instituted. *PAT LALOO PRASAD SINGH v LACHMAN SINGH, 3 Pat 224; (1924) A L R. Succession—Legal and equitable estate, distinction between—Equity, justice and good conscience—Murderer, whether can succeed—Wife, position of—Bandhus, preference between—Statute, construction of.

A Hindu murderer is wholly disqualified from succeeding to the estate left by the murdered person, even if there be no such rule in Hindu Law, the principles of justice, equity and good conscience exclude the murderer from inheritance.

The murderer is, for the purposes of succession, non-existent and cannot be treated as one who forms the stock for a fresh line of descent.

Under Hindu family Law, a wife becomes a member of her husband's gotra, an actual relation of her husband's relations in her own right.

Under Hindu Law bandhus of equal degree succeed equally.

As between bandhus of equal nearness to the propositus, a male bandhu is entitled to preference over a female. *P. C KENCHAVA KOM SANTILLAPPA HOSMANT v GIRIMALLAPPA CHANNAPPA SOMASAGAR, 26 Bom. Hindu Law—contd.

Widow—Debt of husband—Discharge by third person at her request—Liability of widow—Assets of deceased—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 70

It is the duty of a Hindu widow to pay up the debts of her husband out of the assets inherited by her, and if instead of paying them herself out of the assets, she requests a relation of here to obtain a discharge for her from the liability to pay the same, she is liable to compensate her relative out of the assets in her hand under section 70 of the Contract Act, as she enriches the assets to that extent or strictly speaking confers benefit upon the estate by getting the debt paid up. N SUNDAR v. BHOPAT, 7 N. L. J. 187 586

Debts for necessity—Liability of reversioners

A debt incurred by a Hindu widow in circumstances of necessity is binding on the estate, and assets in the hands of reversioners after the widow's death are, therefore, liable for the discharge of such a debt. M GARIMALLA VENKATYA v. MOKKARALA BANGARATYA, 464

Decree against, when binds reversioners—Bond by widow, recitals in, value of.

In deciding whether a sale in execution of a decree against a widow would bind the reversioners, the Court should look beyond the decree to the form of the suit or possibly even to the terms of the document on which the claim for the decree was based.

If the form of the suit is a claim based on a mortgage-deed, the widow in defending such a suit is acting in defence of the estate and on behalf of the reversioners, whereas if the form of the suit is a claim on a personal bond she can not be held to be acting on behalf of the reversioners.

A widow's personal bond even for legal necessity does not bind her husband's property.

The recitals in a bond executed by a widow that she had borrowed money for paying the debts of her deceased husband cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. O RAJ KUNWAR v. MAHARAJ KUNWAR, 832

Compromise by widow—Reversioners, when bound—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 91—Mortgage of property of last male holder—Reversioner, whether interested—Right of reversioner to redeem

A compromise by a Hindu widow admitting the claim of a mortgagee from her husband for an amount far in excess of what is really due cannot be said to be for the benefit of the estate and does not bind the reversioners.

A reversionary heir of the deceased husband of a Hindu widow has such an interest in the property within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act as would entitle him during the lifetime of the widow to redeem a mortgage made by the husband. O BABAYAN v. NATHA, 10 O. & A. L. R. 857, 11 O. L. J. 452 747

Hindu Law—concl.

Widow—Maintenance, right of—Charge on joint property.

The right of a widow under the Hindu Law to be maintained out of her late husband's share in the family property, in the hands of surviving co-parceners creates no immediate charge upon the property, but if it becomes necessary to do so, she can by proper steps obtain such a charge upon a reasonable portion of the joint property not exceeding her husband's share. PAT SHIVA PRASAD SINGH v. EMPEROR, (1924) Pat. 234, 5 P. L. T. 497, (1924) A. L. R. (Pat) 679 653

Surrender.

A Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner and, by a voluntary act, efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. This voluntary self-effacement, sometimes referred to as a surrender and sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights may be effected by any process having that effect, provided there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. M GUNTAKA VENKATADRI v. BATULA SUBBAREDDI, 1025

Transfer by—Reversioner, consent of—Transfer whether can be challenged—Estoppel.

A reversioner in whose favour the succession has opened cannot be permitted to challenge the validity of a transfer by a Hindu widow when before her death he had elected to hold the transfer good. A BAKA v. SITMAN, (1924) A. I. R. 527 372

Will, construction of—Property bequeathed to widow and on her death to cousin—Cousin predeceasing widow—Heirs of cousin, whether entitled—Vested and contingent interest.

It is a settled principle of law that during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, no other person acquires a vested interest in the property held by her.

Therefore, where a Hindu testator directs in a Will that the property on his death would devolve on his widow in full ownership and upon the latter's death on his cousin, it conveys no more than a mere contingent interest to the cousin and, in the event of the cousin predeceasing the widow, his heirs have no right to inherit against the reversioners of the testator. O JAGMOHAN SINGH v. SIKHO MANGAL SINGH, 10 O. & A. L. R. 843 583

Woman's estate—Suit for recovery of debt—Decree whether binds reversionary interest.

A Hindu female heir represents the entire estate in respect of her own as well as the reversionary interest. Therefore, a creditor suing such a female should so frame his suit as to make it clear that he intends to bind the entire estate and not merely the limited or personal interest of the female, so as to put the other persons interested on their guard and to enable them to protect the estate if they care to do so, consequently, if the decree is a mere personal decree against the female, it binds only her personal and not the reversionary interest. *C DATAMOYEE RAY CHOUDHURAN v. Where a Limited Company in order to increase its capital allots its undivided profits to its share-holders in the form of fully paid up bonus shares, and no amount is taken from the Company or received by the share-holders, the acceptance of the allotted shares by the share-holders is not an acceptance of an income, profit or gain within the meaning of the Income Tax Act. *R. While an Income Tax Commissioner may state his opinion on the questions involved, it is his first duty to state clearly and fully the material facts admitted or proved in evidence before him.

Royalties paid by a lessee to the lessor are income within the meaning of the Income Tax Act and are liable to assessment.

Where a lump sum is paid to the landlord under the name of salami for the granting of a lease, the sum so paid is in no sense income within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, but if the lease reserves rent or royalty, the sum so paid is income. The Finance Act contemplates the larger deduction for purposes of super-tax only in a case where the income is that of an undivided family in which the members are all jointly interested and not in the case of an impartible estate where the income is the sole property of the holder for the time being. *PAT SHIVA PRASAD SINGH v. s. 23—Acquisition of land—Compensation, assessment of, mode of—Market value, ascertaining of—Speculative sales, value of.

In assessing the amount of compensation to be paid for a piece of land which is being compulsorily acquired, the market value of the land should not be ascertained piecemeal.

The correct method is to determine the market value of the land as a whole having regard to the sales in the locality.

The mere fact that a parcel of land is bought by a speculator in land with the object of re-selling it at a profit is no ground for disregarding the sale in compensation cases under the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of determining the market value of land. The real question is whether the price paid was such as a prudent man would have paid at the time the transaction took place.

The expression "market value" means the price which a parcel of land would realise if sold in the market. The test is the test of a sale in the market. The seller must be a willing seller, a forced sale affords no criterion of market value. The purchaser must be a prudent purchaser, that is, one who makes his offer after making necessary inquiries as to the value of the land, an offer made by one who knows nothing of the value of the land in the locality and who makes no inquiries about it, affords no test of market value. The market may be dull or brisk, but whether it is dull or brisk it cannot be excluded from consideration. B. GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY v. ALERWAN MOONDIGAR AGA, 25 Bom. L. R. 1182, 48 B. 180, (1924) A. a quarrying basis but should be valued on the basis of what a purchaser would be willing to offer for it.

In the case of compulsory acquisition of toka land, the difference between the market value of toka land as compared with free-hold, represents the then value of the Government interest in the land. When, however, no evidence is available to determine the value of the Government interest in this manner, the Court must arrive at the value as best as it can. The burden of proof is on the tenant when he is sued by his landlord for ejectment, to show that he has a right to stay on the land and cannot be ejected by the proprietor. Where in a suit in ejectment the landlord alleges the termination of tenancy by a proper notice to quit and the tenant raises no objection in his written statement and no issue is framed as to the sufficiency or validity of the notice, it is not open to the tenant in appeal to raise the question.

The person who is the landlord and entitled to possession on the date of a notice to quit is the proper person to give the notice and an assignee within the currency of that notice can take advantage of the notice sent by his assignor and rely upon it when he brings a suit for recovering possession.

Where the assignor has under the terms of the assignment undertaken to get possession from the tenant and to hand over the property to the assignee, a notice to quit by the assignor, even after the assignment, is valid and effective. M NALLULU PANDARATHIL v. Ejectment suit—Plea of permanent tenancy—Onus of proof—Permanent right of occupancy, how acquired—Kudivaram, meaning of—

When in defence of an ejectment suit a tenant of lands sets up a permanent tenancy, the onus of proving that he has such a right is upon him.

A permanent right of occupancy in land is a right, subject to certain conditions, of a tenant to hold the land, which he occupies, permanently. It is a heritable and in some places may be a transferable right. This permanent right of occupancy may only be obtained by a tenant by custom, or by a grant from an owner of the land, who happens to have power to grant such a right, or under an Act of the Legislature.

The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity, it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principles.

No tenant of lands can obtain any right to a permanent tenancy by prescription in them against his landlord from whom he holds the lands.

"Kudivaram" is a Tamil word which signifies a cultivator's share in the produce of land as distinguished from the landlord's share in the produce of the land received by him as rent, which is sometimes designated as "Melvaram."

A vernacular term of uncertain meaning cannot be acted upon by Privy Council. P C NAINAPILLAI v. RAMANATHAN, (1924) A. I. R. (P. C.) 65, 19 L. W. 259, 22 A. L. J. 130, 34 M. L. T. 10, (1924) M. W. N. 293, 46 M. L. J. 548, 10 O. & A. L. R. 464, 47 M. 337, 28 O. W. N. 809. 226

Grant on fixed rent—Grant to two persons—Joint tenancy—Common tenancy—Right of re-entry—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Novation—Terms of grant clear—Evidence of conduct—Suit for declaration and possession—Parties.

Where according to the terms of a grant of lands to two brothers, the grant was perpetual (utimari), the grantees and their descendants (al aulad) were to pay a fixed rent and enjoy the lands generation after generation (quasi dar pushi), the descendants (al aulad) of the grantor were to realize the fixed rent generation after generation (quasi dar pushi), and in the event of default in payment of the fixed rent for three years, the fixed lease (mukarrari) was to be void.

Held, (i) that the grant was permanent in its duration, fixed in the rental, descendible to heirs both in the male and female lines and was to be held generation after generation—that is to say, the grant was an absolute, perpetual, heritable and transferable grant.

(ii) that the grant was not resumable. The novation of a contract implies a fresh contract, directly or by implication, in place of the original contract. Therefore, if the holders of a perpetual and heritable grant, subsequent to the grant, divide the subject-matter of the grant without reference to the grantor, so that their respective heirs might succeed to the specific properties, the principle of novation does not apply.

The incidents of a joint tenancy may be changed and a member of the joint tenancy may sever his connection by effecting partition of his interest and, after this is done, the rule of survivorship of succession will not apply, but the heirs of the separated tenant would succeed to his interest in the tenancy.

Upon the death of one of two joint grantees, the lessor does not become entitled to enter as to one half of the property devised, as the lease does not terminate till the death of the survivor of the two-lessees, and, therefore, the landlord's right to re-enter does not arise till both the lessees are dead.

To a suit for a declaration that an entry in the Survey Record of Rights of a village is incorrect and for recovery of possession, if the plaintiff is deemed to be out of possession, all persons, recorded as in possession of the village and as claiming title adverse to the plaintiff, are necessary parties.

P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 44.

Where there is an oral lease and a registered kabuliyat and rent has been paid and received for several years, the lessee is liable, even if the kabuliyat does not constitute a valid tenancy, to pay compensation for the use and occupation of the land, and the measure of that compensation is the amount agreed to be paid under the lease.

If a mortgagor of land applies for mutation of names and gets himself entered as lessee and the mortgagee as lessor, the latter is entitled to rely on the presumption laid down in section 44 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, that the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties.

If the rent agreed on between the parties for land, in respect of which an expropriatory tenancy has arisen, is less than the statutory rate laid down in section 10 of the Tenancy Act, the rent is claimable even though formal proceedings under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act have not been taken. *A. The mere fact that a document of title held by certain persons is called a potta, and that they executed a kabuliyat in similar terms is not conclusive of the question of whether they were mere lease-holders, i.e., farmers of revenue, or were true proprietors paying a jamabundi to the overlord. The question whether a statement by a debtor is an acknowledgment of debt within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act is one that has to be considered on the merits and having regard to the exact language used.

A statement by a debtor was as follows—“The debt due to this creditor, K B was a mortgage debt. It ripened into a decree. He gave me a letter that he would proceed against the mortgaged properties only and would not proceed against my person.” At the end were these words, “these debts were due by me along with others but they were paid by me alone. I, therefore, owe no debts to any of my creditors.”

Held, that the statement only meant there was no claim against the person of the deponent but there was a clear admission of the existence of a debt which amounted to an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19, Limitation Act. *M TALLAPRAGADA SATTANARAYANA MURTHY v. Such a kudivaramdar is not a "land-holder" within the meaning of section 3 (5), Madras Estates Land Act, and a suit by him in ejectment against the tenants in possession can be tried by a Civil Court.

A testator who died in 1877 by Will executed in English a few months before death gave certain property to his wife and daughter with rights of survivorship to each other. The Will further provided that if his daughter did not beget male issue, in her lifetime, the property given to the wife and daughter was after their lives to go to his brother and his male heirs. If a male was born to the daughter, it was to ~~inherit~~ the real property given to them. A son was born to the daughter in 1881 but died after living for a day. The widow died in 1903 and the daughter, in 1918. In a suit for possession by the sons of the testator's brother against the son-in-law of the testator who claimed the property as the heir of his deceased child:

Held, (1) that after the death of the testator's widow his daughter took an estate for life,

(2) that there was no intestacy of the remainder,

(3) that the word "inherit" used in the Will did not indicate that the daughter's sons were intended to succeed as on an intestacy after the daughter's death;

(4) that the daughter's sons were intended to be devisees under the Will, and to take a contingent remainder, which would be converted into a vested remainder after the birth of the daughter's first son, subject to its diminution as the number of daughter's sons was augmented by further births;

(5) that no child having been born to the daughter during the testator's lifetime, the disposition in favour of the daughter's son was, however, void, and there being no vesting of any estate in or after 1914 to be validated, the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act was inapplicable and the disposition was not validated thereby.

Per Ramaswami, J.—The Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act is not declaratory in the sense that it declares what the law always was. Still it is certainly intended to be retrospective.

The words "come into operation" in section 2 clause (2) of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act are intended to include all cases of vesting after the Act, though the testator died before the Act.

The Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act applies to all Wills made after it and to all Wills made before it, when the testators die after it.

When the testator dies before the Act—

(a) If the vesting is after the Act and the legatee lives up to the termination of the preceding estate the Act applies.

(b) If the vesting is after the Act the Act will apply even though the legatee died before the termination of the preceding estate.

(c) If the vesting is before the Act, still the Act will apply if the devisee survives until after termination of the preceding estate.

(d) If the vesting is before the Act, and the devisee lives until after the Act, but may not or does not live until the termination of the preceding estate, the Act will apply to him and he will transmit the vested estate to his heirs.

(e) But when the vesting was before the Act and the devisee does not live up to the termination of the preceding estate nor even up to beyond the date of the passing of the Act so as to give an opportunity for the Act to operate upon his contingent and void estate and convert it to a vested and valid estate, the Act does not apply.

All that the Act does is, that it validates certain dispositions which, but for it, would be void. But one has to stop its application when the application sought is not the mere validation of a disposition but involves the transmission by inheritance of the interest which never existed up to the time of the succession.

Per Jackson, J.—"Disposition" is a word of most general import and includes distribution.

There is nothing in the language of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act to give it such comprehensive character as to make it applicable to every disposition in a Will executed before it. M. SIVARAMA AYYAR v. GOPALAKRISHNA CHETTIAR, 47 M. L. J. 337. 1044

Madras Land Encroachment Act (III of 1905), ss. 6, 14—Notice to quit—Possession not disturbed—Limitation, when commences—"Deeming themselves aggrieved by proceedings", what amounts to.

A person who has had notice of eviction from the Government under section 6 of the Madras Land Encroachment Act but continues to remain in undisturbed possession cannot be held to have been evicted so as to render the period of limitation under section 14 of the Act applicable to a suit by him against the Government. Where there are a series of proceedings against the person under the Act, being mere notices without any further attack against his title and enjoyment, it is open to him to choose the last of such proceedings and "deem himself aggrieved" by that and not by the earlier proceedings.

The mere fact that such a person applied to review an earlier notice to quit does not necessarily show that he deemed himself aggrieved by the notice when he does not allege it in his plaint as his cause of action. *M. Mallolous prosecution—False charge before Police—Setting law in motion—Liability, test of—Conduct of complainant before and after charge—Damages, measure of.

If a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believes to be correct information to the Police, and the Police without further interference on his part, except giving such honest assistance as they may require, think fit to prosecute, it is improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution.

On the other hand, if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant, if he misleads the Police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it, and if he influences the Police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate, it is improper to allow him to escape the liability because the prosecution has not technically been conducted by him.

The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion in deciding who the prosecutor is. The conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must also be taken into consideration.

The foundation of an action for malicious prosecution is malice, and malice may be shown at any time in the course of the inquiry.

A prosecution, though, at the outset, not malicious, as having been undertaken at the dictation of a Judge or Magistrate, or if spontaneously undertaken, from having been commenced under a bona fide belief in the guilt of the accused, may nevertheless become malicious in any of the stages through which it has to pass, if the prosecutor, having acquired positive knowledge of the innocence of the accused, perseveres malq animo in the prosecution with the intention of procuring per nefas a conviction of the accused.

An award of all legitimate expenses incurred by a successful accused person for his or her defence and for establishing his or her innocence in criminal cases, is always justifiable as those expenses are the direct and necessary consequences of the false and malicious prosecution. *N. Where the property of a Malabar tavashi is invested in partnership trade with a stranger, the karnavan of the tavashi is the trading partner and represents the interests of the joint family. In such a case, each member of the tavashi does not himself become a partner and would have no right to interfere with the management of the affairs of the partnership so long as it is a joint concern.

But the karnavan has no right without the consent of the adult members to surrender the interests of the tavashi without any consideration, as such an act amounts to an alienation of tavashi property; and as he is in a fiduciary position, the junior members thereof are entitled to follow the tavashi property into the hands of those in whose favour it has been alienated.

Where the partnership of the tavashi with the stranger has been dissolved by the death of the latter, a suit by the junior members for an account of the partnership and recovery of the property wrongly alienated is not unsustainable merely because plaintiffs were not members of the partnership. *M. Master and servant—Neglect of duty—Incompetence—Dismissal without notice.

It is open to a master, before the expiry of the full term of service and without serving any notice beforehand, to dispense with the services of a skilled servant employed for a particular work, on the ground that he found him unfit for it.

There is no difference in principle between a dismissal for incompetency or for negligence or misconduct. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify a dismissal. Of course there may be misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand, misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal. Similarly even a single act of negligence may, in some circumstances, justify a dismissal. In both cases the question is one of fact and degree, depending on the circumstances of each particular case.

Where a skilled labourer, artisan or artist is employed there is on his part an implied warranty that he is of skill, reasonably competent to the task he undertakes—"Spondes peritiam artis".

If a master can show that he has a good cause for dismissing his servant, he may dismiss him notwithstanding that the contract or agreement between them is for a fixed period, and it is not necessary for him to go through the form of suing for the cancellation of the engagement. *N. r. 6, scope of—Death of party after hearing and sentative—Abatement of suit, if prevented—Procedure, rules of—Breach, effect of.

A decree passed against a minor is null and void, and is liable to be set aside at the instance of the minor.

In such a case the Court is not concerned with the question whether the minor has or has not suffered any prejudice by the decree.

Per Dalal, J.—Order XXII, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code covers cases where the Court is unaware of the death of a party and proceeds on the assumption that the parties are alive. It has no reference to a decree passed against a living person, a minor brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party.

Where the record of a suit itself shows that a minor is wholly unrepresented, or that he is represented by a guardian disqualified from acting as such a guardian under the express provision of a Statute, the result is that the minor is not properly a party to the suit, and a judgment rendered against the minor is without jurisdiction and null and void. But where he is properly a party to the suit—and as he is properly a party if he is represented in the record by a guardian not disqualified from acting—the jurisdiction of the Court to try and determine the cause as against the minor is complete, and such jurisdiction will not be ousted on proof that the Court did not follow the appropriate procedure for the appointment of the guardian.

Per Mukerjee, J.—Where a minor has been substantially represented and has not been prejudiced in the litigation, it is not open to him to obtain the relief of a declaration that the decree is not binding on him.

The objective law, namely "the law of procedure, is merely a hand-maiden to justice and where substantial justice has been done a breach of a rule of procedure cannot by itself be a ground for a suit.

Where there is no prejudice, there is no grievance to be redressed. The mere fact that there has been a defect in following the procedure cannot be made a matter of grievance and there can be no redress.

A decree, however proper it may be, passed against a person who is already dead can be of no effect against the estate of the deceased and is a mere nullity.

In principle, there is nothing to differentiate the case of a decree passed against a dead man from a decree passed against a person who is suffering from the disability of minority without Held, (1) that the fact that a fixed sum was stipulated every year instead of a variable amount to be determined after calculating the profit or loss of the particular year did not affect the question of the mortgagee's liability.

In a suit for redemption of an English mortgage, in which a definite term is fixed for repayment of the principal and interest, the plaintiffs are bound to pay post diem interest up to the date of redemption, after taking credit for sums which the mortgagee got from the mortgaged property during the period he was in possession, unless the terms of the document show that the intention of the parties was that no interest should be paid subsequent to the date when the mortgage-money became due.

The granting of the power of sale in a mortgage is only a remedy which is usually given and the mortgagee is not bound to exercise the power any more than he is bound to sue on the expiry of the due date, under the penalty of his losing subsequent interest.

The period of limitation applicable to a suit

Where a prior mortgagee creates a rent free tenancy over a part of the mortgaged property in favour of the mortgagor, the subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to obtain cultivating possession of the tenancy land by ousting the mortgagor but he is not bound by the contract exempting the mortgagor from paying rent for the land.

The rule that, "where upon a sale by a first mortgagee the property is brought in by the mortgagor himself, he can only acquire the estate subject to the second mortgage", has no application to a case where the subsequent mortgagee takes his mortgage with full knowledge of the liabilities and risk created under the first mortgage, and actually undertakes to free the property from that mortgage, and still fails to carry out the obligations incurred by him.

A suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was contested on the ground, among others, that the mortgagee had acquired the equity of redemption. It appeared that the mortgagor executed in favour of the mortgagee a document reciting receipt of earnest-money and stating that the mortgagor would execute a sale-deed in respect of the mortgaged property six months before the expiry of the term of the mortgage. The mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee shall appropriate the property in lieu of interest and shall bear no claim for interest against the mortgagor who in his turn would have no claim for profits against the mortgagee.

Held, (1) that the intention of the parties was not to effect a transfer of property but merely to contract for such a transfer.

(2) that this contract of sale had no effect on the status of parties and they remained after it, as before, mortgagor and mortgagee.

(3) that section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and the mortgagee was not liable to render accounts to the mortgagor. O SITLA SAHAI v DHUM SINGH, 10 O. & A. L. R. 655; 11 O. L. J. 543. 406

Where, therefore, a Muhammadian is born 331 days or full eleven months after his alleged father's death and it is found that his mother had illicit connection with another man, it is sufficient to rebut the presumption of his legitimacy and to justify the Court in finding that he is not the son of his alleged father. *A FATEH DIN v. Forged endorsement—Pledge, validity of—Conversion.

A forged endorsement of an instrument is a nullity and conveys no title to endorsee. It is as much a nullity as a forged cheque or a forged Aundi, provided there has been no negligence on the part of the true owner in allowing the instrument to come into the hands of the forger. A holder under a forged endorsement is not a holder in due course.

Where a share and insurance broker purchases War Bonds for a customer, but pledges them to secure a personal loan after forging endorsements in his own favour, the true owner cannot be said to be guilty of negligence if he relies upon the statement of the forger to the effect that the instruments are not ready for issue, and takes prompt measures to notify the fraud and recover the instruments when he comes to know of the forgery.

Possession of War Bonds by a share and insurance broker which come to him in the course of business for handing them over to a customer and which he pledges to a Bank for his personal loan after forging endorsements in his favour, is not such juridical possession as will under section 178, Contract Act, give the Bank any title to the bonds, as against the customer. In such a case, the Bank cannot hold the bonds against the true owner, and the Bank by accepting them as security for the advance and by resisting the demand of the true owner, is guilty of conversion. *S. Right of private defence

Several heads of cattle belonging to the party of the complainant trespassed into a maize field belonging to the party of the accused. The members of the latter party captured the cattle and began to drive them towards the cattle pound, whereupon the members of the opposite party, armed with lathis, etc., set upon them and rescued the cattle. Upon this there was a serious fight which resulted in the death of several men on both sides. The fight took place in a field belonging to the party of the accused.

Held, (1) that as the rescue of the cattle amounted to theft under the Penal Code, apart from an offence under the Cattle Trespass Act, the right of private defence was available to the party of the accused.

(2) that if the men of the party of the complainant entered upon the field, belonging to the party of the accused, with the object of committing an assault, they were guilty of the offence of criminal trespass and the members of the party of the accused had the right to eject them by such force as was necessary.

(3) that there was nothing wrong on the part of the party of the accused in awaiting the coming of their antagonists and in maintaining their possession of the cattle which they had lawfully seized.

(4) that it was not the duty of the party of the accused to release the cattle and complain to the authorities.

Where possession is undisputed or where there is no time to seek the aid of the authorities, there is no obligation upon a person entitled to exercise the right of private defence and to defend his person or his property, to retire from the field merely because his assailant threatens him with violence.

Penal Code—contd.

A man acting under an apprehension of death cannot be expected to judge too nicely the force of his own blow. He is not bound to modulate his defence step by step according to the attack, before there is reason to believe that the attack is over; he is not obliged to retreat but may pursue his adversary till he finds himself out of danger, and if in a conflict between them, he happens to kill, such killing is unjustifiable.

If the members of an assembly act with the common object of exceeding the right of private defence, then they are not only all generally guilty of rioting but also of the particular offence constituted by such excess of user.

An assault is a crime except under certain special circumstances. But in one sense criminal force is a continuing wrong and there is a limit where the plea of justification ceases to operate and the liability to punishment revives, if one member in prosecution of the common object of an assembly exceeds that limit every other member shares with him the guilt of his act. PAT LALJI SINGH v EMPEROR, 2 Pat 595, (1924) A. Accused No. 1 effected insurances of his stock of paddy said to be lying at a mill belonging to accused No. 2, with three Insurance Companies. The mill and the paddy were subsequently burnt. Accused No. 1 gave notice of the fire to the Insurance Companies and followed this up by loss claims in which a much larger quantity of paddy was stated to have been destroyed by the fire than could possibly have been stored in the godowns of the mill. In the enquiry which followed accused No. 2 supported the statement of accused No. 1 as to the quantity of paddy which had been destroyed, although he must have known that the quantity destroyed was considerably less.

Held, (1) that the act of accused No. 1 in sending in a claim to the Insurance Companies which was false to his knowledge amounted to an attempt to cheat the Companies and was not merely a preparation to cheat.

(2) that the accused No. 2, having engaged in a conspiracy with accused No. 1 to cheat the Insurance Companies and an act (i.e., the sending in of false claims) having been done in pursuance of the conspiracy and in order to the cheating, accused No. 2 was guilty of abetment of the offence committed by accused No. 1 under the second clause of section 107 of the Penal Code.

A mere act of preparation for the commission of an offence is not such an act towards its commission as amounts to an attempt to commit the offence within the meaning of section 511 of the Penal Code.

Whether any given act or series of acts amounts to an attempt of which the law will take notice, or merely to preparation, is a question of fact in each case. R. MADON PO HMTIN v EMPEROR, 3 Bur. L. J. 1; 2 R. 53; (1924) A. I. R. (R.) 241; 25 Cr. L. J. 1175 39

s. 114.—Interpretation—Charge—No proof of acts previous to commission of offence—Abetment—Prejudice to accused.

Section 114, Penal Code deals with a person, who would be guilty of abetment independent of any act done at the time of the offence, that is to say, a person whose abetment is complete apart from his presence. The section defines the liability of such a person if he happens to be present when the offence is committed.

A charge against an accused ran thus:—"You... abetted by being present, in the commission of the offence of mischief... and thereby committed an offence under sections 114 and 430, Indian Penal Code." No acts were alleged on the part of the accused which related to a point of time previous to the commission of the offence. At the trial the case sought to be made out against him was that he was at the place where the offence was committed and instigated the other accused to commit the offence at the time they committed it. On revision against the conviction.

Held, that the accused must be held to have been misled by the nature of the charge and that the error had occasioned a failure of justice. M. ANNAYI v. EMPEROOR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1254. 262 ss. 120B, 420, 511.—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 237—Conspiracy to cheat—Charge covering three transactions—Different overt acts—Charge, whether bad—Transactions intervening overt acts, effect of—Cheating, charge of, what must contain—Omission to mention persons deceived, whether fatal—Fraudulent bills presented at different times—Offences, whether separate—Evidence sufficient to prove attempt to cheat—Accused whether can be convicted of attempt—Evidence of cheating whether material for proving conspiracy—Criminal trial—Prolonged proceedings—Sentence.

A charge against certain accused, of having conspired with each other to commit an offence punishable under section 420, Penal Code, to wit to cheat the Government of India of large sums of money in respect of the supply of linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil, and of having thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 120B and 420, Penal Code, though not clearly worded, is capable of being interpreted as alleging one general conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under section 420, Penal Code, the three transactions mentioned constituting overt acts, from which the conspiracy might be inferred, and the defect in the charge is not fatal if the accused are fully aware of the charge being of one general conspiracy and not of three different conspiracies.

A charge under section 420, Penal Code, should contain an allegation of the person or persons alleged to have been deceived and induced to part with property as the result of that deceit.

Penal Code—contd.

But where the charge against an accused is that he cheated the Government of India by dishonestly inducing the Government to deliver a cheque, the property of Government, in payment of fraudulent bills and thereby committed an offence under section 420, Penal Code, an omission to mention therein the person or persons alleged to have been deceived and induced to issue the cheque, is not a fatal defect in the charge, if the accused is not misled and there is no failure of justice by reason of the omission.

If in the course of a transaction between two persons different false and fraudulent bills are presented for realization at different dates, that does not make them matters for so many different offences under section 420, Penal Code, inasmuch as an offence in relation to any one of them is not complete until the money is paid or the cheque is issued and if one cheque is obtained through the inducement of all such bills, there is only one offence and not so many different offences of cheating.

If in a charge intended to allege one general conspiracy, several transactions are mentioned in which the accused took part in pursuance of that conspiracy, they are to be taken as so many overt acts from which a general conspiracy to commit offences might be inferred.

The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy to commit offences lies in the agreement or common intention of the accused and the question whether such an agreement or common intention exists, is a matter of inference to be deduced from the facts of the case and the acts of the accused proved in evidence and alleged to have been committed by them in pursuance of such agreement or common intention.

If between the dates of different matters alleged as overt acts amounting to criminal conspiracy of the accused there are transactions by them which are not false or fraudulent, they are not inconsistent with the existence of a general conspiracy.

Under section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, an accused may be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence even though he has not been charged with it. O. BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROOR, 27 Cr. W. N. 821, (1924) A. I. R. (C) 18, 25 Cr. L. J. 1313. 545

s. 124A.—Sedition—Ingredient of offence—Intention, how determined—Prosecution, whether bound to produce direct evidence—Presumption—Accused, duty of.

The question whether a certain article in a newspaper is or is not seditious within the meaning of section 124A, Penal Code, depends upon whether it was or was not intended to bring the Government into hatred or contempt.

Intention is a state of mind which may be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and may well be presumed from the conduct of the writer or the publisher which would include also the character of the language employed by him.

Intention is an essential element in the offence of sedition but it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the intention directly by evidence.

Penal Code—contd.

The law will presume the intention—whether good or bad—from the language and conduct of the accused, and it will be then for him to show that his words were harmless and his motives innocent. L. JIWAN SINGH v. EMPEROR, 6 L. L. J. 379, 25 Cr. L. J. 1342 574

s. 154—Owner of land failing to give information of riot—Ingredients of offence.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—The ingredients necessary for a prosecution under section 154 of the Penal Code are the following:—

(a) Unlawful assembly or riot.
(b) Accused is the owner or occupier of the land or has or claims to have an interest in the land.

(c) Either the accused or his agent or manager knew that the offence was being or had been committed or had reason to believe that it was likely to be committed.

(d) With such knowledge that the offence was being or had been committed, or having reason to believe that it was likely to be committed the accused did not give notice to the nearest Police Station.

Penal Code—contd.

(e) The accused having reason to believe that the offence was about to be committed, did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent the offence or in the event of its taking place, did not use all lawful means in his power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly.

It is not necessary, however, in order to render the owner of land on which a riot takes place criminally liable that he should be aware of the likelihood of such an occurrence and it is enough that his factor or agent should have taken an active part in the riot to warrant the conviction of the owner under section 154, Penal Code.

The very greatest caution is required before proceedings are started against a person under section 154 of the Penal Code. C. NRIPENDRA BHUSAN v. GOBINDA BANDHU, 39 O. L. J. 236; 25 Cr. L. J. 1258, (1924) A. I. R. (C) 1018 266

ss. 182, 211, distinction between—Ingredients of offences

To constitute an offence under section 182, Penal Code, the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or to the belief of the informant and it is not sufficient that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false, whereas, under section 211 it is sufficient if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and when he acts without due care or caution. *S. If the complainant confines himself to reporting what he knows of the facts, stating his suspicions, and leaving the matter to be further investigated by the Police, or leaving the Police to take such course as they think right in the performance of their duty, he may be making a report, but he is not making a charge. But if he takes the further step, without waiting for any official investigation, of definitely alleging his belief in the guilt of a specified person, and his desire that the specified person be proceeded against in Court, that act of his, whether verbal or written, if made to an officer of the law authorised to initiate proceedings based upon the complainant's statement, whether amounting to an expression of the complainant's belief in the guilt of the specified person, or his desire that Court proceedings be taken against him, amounts to making a charge. *A. The applicant's story having been found to be false, complaints were framed against him and his witnesses under section 103, Penal Code.

Held, that as the statements of the accused were not taken by the Magistrate in the course of any judicial proceeding and as he had no authority to administer an oath, the accused could not be convicted of giving false evidence under section 193, Penal Code. *L. It is absolutely necessary, in order to convict under section 436 of the Penal Code, to prove that the building which the accused destroyed came within one of the three classes mentioned in the section, and the words "ordinarily used" do not mean that other buildings are from time to time used for purposes such as those stated in the section but they mean that that particular building is itself used.

Certain villagers were convicted under sections 304 and 436, Penal Code, for having made an attack on the Chamars of the village, resulting in the destruction by fire of their chaupal, and the death of a child therein. It appeared that on being attacked, the Chamars fled from the spot and left the child inside the chaupal. There was no evidence that the chaupal was ordinarily used as a human dwelling or for one of the other purposes specified in section 436. Nor did the accused know that the child was inside when they set fire to it.

Held, that under the circumstances no offence under section 304 or section 436, Penal Code, had been established. A. KHANJAN v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1190, (1924) A. I. R. (A) 781 54

The knife pierced the chest and cut the heart causing death. The knife had a blade of three or four inches, and the Counsel for the accused contended that it was not a dangerous weapon.

Held, (1) that a knife which actually caused the fatal injury was undoubtedly a dangerous weapon;

(2) that the accused did not intend to cause death or to cause such injury as was likely to cause death;

(3) that, however, he must have known that he was likely to cause death and was, therefore, guilty of an offence under section 304, Part II of the Penal Code. L. KHAN MITR v. EMPEROR, 25 Cr. L. J. 1239 361

The offence of house trespass is not complete unless there is an intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy some one in possession of property. It is not enough that the accused should know that his act is likely to have such an effect.

When the action of an accused is open to two constructions, one criminal and the other honest, the Court should not assume that it was criminal.

Penal Code—contd.

On information that the complainant had a pot of toddy in his house in excess of the quantity which one individual may possess without license, the accused, a village taliari, went inside the house, brought out the pot and placed it on the verandah and remained guarding it till the Police, to whom he sent a message about the commission of the offence, arrived. On revision against conviction for house trespass.

Held, that although the accused as a taliari had no authority to seize and detain liquor which he believed was liable to confiscation under the Abkari Act, his conduct in entering the house was bona fide and without any criminal intent, and his conviction could not stand. *M. — Wajib-ul-arz giving full liberty of transfer — Partition of village—Agreement between proprietors recognising pre-emption—Agreement, nature of—Successors-in-interest of proprietors, whether bound.

A custom excluding the right of pre-emption can be validly superseded by the agreement of the proprietors of the village and such an agreement binds their successors-in-title.

In a suit for pre-emption of a sale the defence was the existence of a custom contrary to the right of pre-emption. The wajib-ul-arz of the village provided that every co-sharer was at liberty to transfer his share to any one he pleased. Another wajib-ul-arz prepared subsequently at the time of the partition of the village modified this provision by saying that in case of a sale the pre-emptor had the right to pre-empt.

Held, (1) that the original wajib-ul-arz did establish a custom excluding the legal right of pre-emption, but this custom was abrogated by the agreement of the proprietors at the time of the partition of the village;

(2) that the agreement to supersede the custom was an agreement in relation to the right of transfer of the proprietary interest in the soil of the village and must run with the land,

(3) that consequently the agreement was binding on the successors-in-interest of the proprietors. O. MAQBUL-UN-NISSA v. BANSIDHAR, 11 O. L. J. 319, (1924) A. I. R. (O) 382 92

ous matter—Presumption of custom, whether arises—Custom of pre-emption—Burden of proof.

Plaintiffs sued for pre-emption alleging that they were co-sharers in the thok while defendants were strangers. It appeared that the village comprised two thoks, that the plaintiffs were co-sharers in the thok in which the property in suit was situated and that the defendants were co-sharers in the other thok. The paragraph of the wajib-ul-arz dealing with the right of pre-emption provided that in the case of a transfer by sale or mortgage but not by a gift, the claim to the right of pre-emption shall belong first to an own brother, and nephew, then to a paternal cousin, a partner in the property, then to the co-sharer in the thok and then to the co-sharer of the village. It provided further that "gift will be made in favour of an own brother and nephew or daughter's son or for a charitable purpose and not otherwise."

Held, (1) that the inclusion of extraneous matters in the same clause which could not possibly be the subject of a custom, precluded the possibility of the clause being treated as a record of custom in regard to any of the matters of which that clause formed a part,

(2) that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz were ambiguous and capable of two interpretations;

(3) that for these reasons the plaintiffs' claim was bound to fail.

Per Kanhaya Lal, J.—A wajib-ul-arz is in the absence of intrinsic or extrinsic evidence to the contrary a prima facie evidence of the custom it records. Each wajib-ul-arz must be interpreted according to its own terms, and in the absence of any terms of limitation in a pre-emption clause confining its operation to a transfer in favour of a stranger, the right of pre-emption can be enforced, so far as it may be, between the persons belonging to the different categories mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz inter se.

Where all the lands belonging to the parent khatas are held in sewerali, the mere existence of a common khatas containing certain barren, uncultivated or abadi lands, which usually remain the property of all the co-sharers of the village till a partition is formally effected, cannot make a person who belongs in other respects to one class or category, a joint co-sharer with another who belongs to another class or category, as regards any separate interest the latter may sell.

Where a wajib-ul-arz contains matters which cannot properly or possibly be the subject of a custom, then the ordinary presumption that the wajib-ul-arz is a prima facie record of a custom is overturned by the internal evidence afforded by the other terms embodied therein though they may be separable from the rest.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The burden of proving the custom of pre-emption lies on the plaintiff. The plaintiff pre-emptor cannot succeed by merely proving that a custom of pre-emption exists in the village. He has to show that that particular custom exists which would entitle him to a decree against the defendant vendee.

Pre-emption—conold.

If the only evidence which the plaintiff can produce is ambiguous, that is to say, is capable of two interpretations, and if on one of such interpretations the suit cannot succeed, then the suit must fail, and it is not the duty of the Court to give it necessarily the other interpretation which would entitle the plaintiff to a decree.

If the clause of pre-emption contains matters which cannot possibly be a record of custom, then the ordinary presumption which arises that the entry is one of custom, is negatived. A LALCHAND v. RAM CHAND, (1924) A. I. R. (A) 753 526

(1), 16—Hindu Law—Joint family—Father adjudicated insolvent—Sons' interest whether vests in Official Receiver—Nature of father's powers—Suit by sons for partition—Decree, nature of.

On the adjudication as an insolvent of an undivided Hindu father what, in addition to his interest, vests in the Official Receiver is not only the power to dispose of the sons' shares for the satisfaction of the debts which are neither illegal nor immoral but the entire property inclusive of the shares of the sons therein.

Provincial Insolvency Act—1907—concl'd.

Nor is such vesting conditional, contingent upon or proportionate to the debts of the father which are neither illegal nor immoral.

The property, however, so vests only for the purpose of enabling the Receiver to exercise the power of sale which the father had of disposing of the property for discharge of debts of an unobjectionable character. The sons, therefore, can in proper proceedings require to have it determined in respect of which debts such power can be exercised and in respect of which not; and to have made over to them what is left after the administration of the insolvent's estate and the due exercise of the powers by the Official Receiver.

A suit by Hindu sons for partition is not barred by the adjudication of the father as insolvent. In such a suit, the question of the illegality or immorality of the father's debts should be tried and the sons declared separate in status from the father, only the actual division by metes and bounds and the passing of the final decree must be deferred till the completion of the administration of the estate and its divestment from the hands of the Official Receiver.

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—The power of a father to dispose of his sons' shares also, for the payment of his debts is not in the nature of a latent power which comes into existence on the coming into existence of certain conditions precedent but a potential power over the entire property exercisable by him validly, subject only to the sons successfully questioning the same in proper proceedings.

The vesting of the interest in the Official Receiver on a Hindu father's insolvency must be regarded as in the nature of a trust for the exercise of the father's power of disposal of the family property for his antecedent debts on the one hand and on the other for the ascertainment and delivery over to the sons of the remainder of the property, if any. *M. It is not necessary that a man should actually be indebted at the time he enters into a voluntary settlement to make it fraudulent; if he does it with a view to his being indebted at a future time, it is equally fraudulent, and ought to be set aside. A man can commit what may be termed compendiously "anticipatory fraud" and effect a transfer of his properties with a view to get into debt and prevent his creditors getting at his property.

Under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, every transaction which an insolvent enters into within two years previous to his insolvency is treated as prima facie invalid and the burden is on the insolvent or the alienee to show that the transaction impeached is a valid and bona fide one.

Both good faith and valuable consideration have to be proved. The circumstances under which the deed came to be executed, the covenants made therein, the conduct of the parties both at the time and subsequently have all to be taken into consideration. If the transfer was really intended to be carried out and was made bona fide for saving the insolvent from incurring debts and running himself, the transfer would not be interfered with, but if circumstances show that the transferor was actually screening his properties from the reach of his future creditors, the transfer would be a fraudulent one. M OFFICIAL RECEIVER, TANJOOR v VEDAPPA MUDALIAR, (1924) W N 508; 47 M L J 431, 20 L W 683, (1924) A I R (M), 865. 450

The law of pre-emption insists on physical possession, because physical possession is visible to all concerned. It is a notice to all would-be pre-emptors that a change has occurred in the enjoyment and possession of the land in question and puts them to inquiry.

In the case of cultivated land physical possession may be taken even symbolically, but there must be some evidence of symbols employed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Agreement to re-purchase, whether requires registration—Time, whether of essence of contract—Tender—Avoidance by vendee, effect of—Extension of time

A mere option to re-purchase which has not the effect of reducing the original conveyance to a mortgage and does not give rise to a right of redemption, does not require registration.

In the case of an agreement to re-purchase time is of the essence of the contract, and the doctrine that time may not be of the essence of the contract which arises on the construction of contracts of sale of immovable property, is not applicable, for the right to re-purchase, being an option, must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power.

But although time is of the essence of the contract in the case of an agreement to re-purchase, a default by the payee such as renders proper tender by the purchaser by due date impracticable, would be interpreted by the Courts as extending time, when it is clear that the purchaser was prepared with a ready and willing tender. *R. s. 17—Construction of document—Sale-deed—Agreement to reconvey—Mortgage or option of re-purchase—Registration, whether necessary

The parties to a registered sale-deed executed an agreement contemporaneous with the sale-deed, whereby the vendee agreed that if the vendor re-paid to him the purchase-money with interest at a certain rate within two years he would reconvey the property to the vendor.

Held, that the agreement was a mere option of re-purchase and did not amount to a mortgage and was, therefore, not compulsorily registrable. R. MAUNG PAUNG v. MA ON, 2 Bur. L. J. 89, (1923) A. I. R. (R) 242 606

s. 17 (1) (b), (c), (2) (v)—Agreement to reconvey property—Registration, whether necessary.

An agreement by a purchaser of immovable property to reconvey the property to the vendor at any time that the latter requires, does not fall within the purview of clauses (b) and (c) of subsection (1) of section 17 of the Registration Act, and is, in any case, covered by clause (v) of subsection (2) of the section, and does not, therefore, require registration. *B. An unregistered deed of gift confers no title on the donee, but if he has been in possession longer than the prescriptive period, the deed may be admitted in evidence to ascertain the nature and character of donee's possession.

There is no warrant for the proposition that in maintenance deeds the words "with absolute rights, etc." ought to be construed in a manner different from the way in which they would be construed if they occurred in other documents. *M NARAYANA SWAMY v. In a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, against the refusal of the Registrar to register a document, the same considerations should guide the Court which should guide the Registrar in considering his duty to register or refuse registration.

The question for consideration, would be whether the document tendered for registration was actually in the state in which it was executed by the parties to it.

Where it is found that the document tendered bears the most apparent traces of having been tampered with, after the execution of the document in its original state, the Court should refuse to direct registration. M BOLLA GROVATTA v. CHERUKURI VENKATARAMAIAH, 47 M. L. J. 271; 47 M. 833, (1924) A. I. R. (M) 810, 20 L. W. 977. 483

Rent, suit for—Question of title, whether can be determined—Transaction in support of title—Defendant, whether can impeach by way of defence—Separate suit, whether necessary.

It cannot be affirmed as a broad proposition of law that a question of title may not be incidentally investigated in a suit for arrears of rent.

Where a tenant-defendant disputes the extent of the title of the plaintiff-landlord to the arrears demanded, it is incumbent on the Court to determine the point before the claim is allowed or disallowed. But, subject to this reservation parties should not be added in a suit for rent so as to alter its nature and scope and to transform it into a suit for determination of a complicated question of title to land.

It is an elementary proposition that if the plaintiff relies upon a transaction in support of his title, the defendant is entitled to impeach its validity by way of defence to the claim and is

When a plaintiff is dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law and wishes to take the benefit of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, he ought to institute his suit on that ground alone and not on title.

Therefore, when a plaintiff sues for possession on the basis of a title and fails to establish his title, his suit for possession based on title cannot be converted into a suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and a decree for possession cannot be granted to him under that section.

Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply to a suit by a dispossessed mortgagee for recovery of possession and in the alternative for recovery of the mortgage-money. A. GANESHAJI v. BRUSHI RAI. 324

s. 45—Court's jurisdiction, nature of—Specific remedy available—High Court, whether will take action—Bengal Electoral Rules, r. 51—Election, whether can be questioned in Court. 851

The jurisdiction given to the High Court under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act is a discretionary jurisdiction and is limited by promises and exemptions which are set out in the section.

One H. applied under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act for an order requiring the Returning Officer to accept his nomination paper for election to the Bengal Legislative Council and reject that of his rival candidate M. The application having been rejected H. appealed but during the pendency of the appeal the Returning Officer declared M to be duly elected.

Held, (1) that inasmuch as it was open to H. to contest the election of M by an election petition, he had another specific and adequate legal remedy, and the Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to make an order under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

(2) that as M had been declared to be duly elected the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with that declaration in those proceedings. O. HALDER v. MALLAK, 28 C. W. N. 127, (1924) A. I. R. (C) 454. 930

The jurisdiction of the High Court to make orders under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act is entirely discretionary and in dealing with an application under Chapter VIII of the Act, the principles applicable to a writ of mandamus should be followed.

The writ of mandamus is a high prerogative writ and is granted to amplify justice and to preserve a right where there is no specific legal remedy. Therefore, it cannot be demanded ex debito justitiae but issues only in the discretion of the Court.

In the case of a writ of mandamus the rights to be enforced must be of a public nature.

affecting the public at large and also those which although of a public nature, specially affect the rights of individuals, and the person applying must show that he has a real and special interest in the subject-matter and a specific legal right to enforce.

There must be a sufficient demand to perform the act sought to be enforced and a refusal to perform it. It is not necessary that the word "refuse" or some equivalent of it, should be used but there should be enough to show that the party withholds compliance and distinctly determines not to do what is required of him. There must also be a possibility of effective enforcement of the writ which will not issue if alternative remedies or remedy are or is open to the applicant.

An applicant for a writ of mandamus must fulfil all the conditions laid down in proviso (a) to (e) of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. These conditions are cumulative and all of them must be fulfilled.

The Court in such cases is invested with very large powers and the remedy is of a summary nature and coercive in its character and it is elementary that the wider the power, the greater must be the caution with which the power is exercised.

Where, therefore, a member of the Bengal Legislative Council applied to the High Court for the issue of a writ of mandamus against the President of the Council ordering him to decide and to disallow a motion about the estimates to be presented to the Council for a supplementary of additional grant on account of the salaries of Ministers, when such grants had been on a previous occasion disallowed by the Council and the petitioner as a member of the Council had exercised his motion in favour of disallowing the motion, and further prayed that his property, franchise and personal rights as a member of the said Council and otherwise, would be injured if the President was not directed to decide on the lines indicated above.

Held, (1) that as the applicant paid revenue from which Ministers drew their salaries along with thousands others, a denial of his prayer, did not cause such injury to his property as was contemplated by proviso (a) to section 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

(2) that the word "franchise" in the proviso did not include the right to vote in the Legislative Council though in its electoral sense it denoted both the right of voting at elections and the qualifications upon which that right was based.

(3) that if the applicant's notions of what was legal or illegal under the Rules and Standing Orders, were hurt, that did not mean that his 'personal rights' had been injured.

Whether there has been a denial of justice or not, is a mixed question of law and fact. G. JATINDRA MOHAN SEN GUPTA, In re, 40 O. L. J. 44, 51, C. 874.

But when a suit is brought on the award subsequently, the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators can be challenged on the ground that there was no valid reference, and it becomes the duty of the Court to investigate the assertion, who again is entitled, on ascertaining the true facts, to proceed under section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act.

Right to sue for accounts, whether assignable—Suit on basis of assignment—Transferability, test of—Right arising out of contract, whether transferable—Title-deed, delivery of—Right, whether transferred.

A right to sue for accounts is not assignable in law and, therefore, a suit on the basis of such assignment for recovery of the sum found due on the taking of accounts is not maintainable.

The test for determining the transferability or otherwise of an inchoate right is whether it can be attached in execution of a decree.

Section 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act applies not only to rights arising out of torts but also to rights arising out of contract.

The mere delivery of a document of title does not constitute a transfer of the right to the property. C. PROHLAD CHANDRA DAS v. BISWA NATH, 28 O. W. N. 894, 40 O. L. J. 79, (1924) A. I. R. (O) 1047. 411

In construing a document the Court has to construe the words of the document as they stand according to their plain grammatical meaning and whatever the parties may have intended they must be bound by the plain meaning of the words to which they attached their signatures. Covenants in a deed of transfer which cast a very onerous burden on the covenantor must be read strictly against the covenantee.

Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The principle which underlies the rule against perpetuities and which is embodied in section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to this class of contracts.

A covenant in a deed of sale reserving to the vendor and his heirs a right of pre-emption or first refusal to arise on an intended sale of the property is not a covenant which runs with the land at law, and, if it is unlimited in point of time, is void on the ground that it is obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. *B. U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910), ss. 3 (2), 10—“Excise Officer”, meaning of—Police Officer specially invested with powers.

Under section 10 of the U. P. Excise Act the Local Government has authority to empower, not only a Sub-Inspector of Police, but any Police Officer, to perform duties and exercise powers under that Act, including the conferment of authority to make a report or complaint.

A Sub-Inspector of Police who has been invested with powers under the Excise Act by the Government is an “Excise Officer” within the meaning of the Act and is competent to make a complaint or report to a Magistrate under section 71 (a) of the Act. *A. s. 64 (c)—Sale by one partner out of prescribed hours—Other partner, liability of.

For purposes of agency two partners stand to one another in the same relation as master and servant.

Where, therefore, one of the partners in a liquor shop commits a wilful breach of the license and sells liquor after prescribed hours, he does so as agent for the other partner who is, therefore, equally liable. *A. Where a case is transferred from a Small Cause Court to an Honorary Munsif’s Court under section 8 (2) of U. P. Honorary Munsif’s Act and not under section 24, Civil Procedure Code, the Honorary Munsif, for the purpose of hearing the case, does not become a Small Cause Court Judge and, therefore, his decision is appealable. *A. ss. 48, 49, 56, 86, 230—Power of recording cesses—Assistant Record Officer, when can make record—Cess recorded by Settlement Officer, when recoverable—Sanction of settlement operations, whether sufficient.

The power of recording cesses conferred on the Record Officer by section 56 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act can be exercised by the Assistant Record Officer under section 230, subject to the control of the Record Officer.

Where there is no revision of records notified by the Local Government as required by section 48 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act and no Record Officer has been appointed by it under section 49, the Assistant Record Officer has no authority to make any record such as would make a case valid under the provisions of section 56 of the Act.

A mere sanction of a settlement operation of a district does not include a definite sanction, as is required by section 86 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act for the preparation of a list of cesses in accordance with village custom. A. SUKUMWA v. NAZIR AHMAD, 22 A. L. J. 900; 10 O. & A. L. R. 1855. 1027.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 128 (1) (ix)—“Trade”, meaning of—Tax on circumstances and property—Salaried clerk, whether liable to be taxed.

“Trade” implies buying and selling, or dealing in money or at least the making of some article for the purpose of sale. Further, a person can only be said to be carrying on trade in the ordinary sense of the word when he is working for his own profit, and not when he is in receipt of a fixed salary.

Therefore, a person who resides outside the Municipal limits but is employed during business hours as a clerk on a salary within Municipal limits is not liable to be taxed under a tax on circumstances and property imposed on persons “residing or carrying on any trade or owning property within the limits of the Municipality” under clause (ix) of section 128 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act. A. BRIJ BHUSHAN LAL v. MUNICIPAL BOARD OF KANAUJ, 22 A. L. J. 599, (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 587, 46 A. 685. 89.

Vendor and purchaser—Some interest reserved by vendor in property sold—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 10—Rule against perpetuity—Succession.

There is nothing to prevent a vendor from reserving a certain interest in the property comprised in the sale for the benefit of himself and his lineal male descendants without any power of alienation, subject to the reversion of that interest in case there were no male descendants left to enjoy the benefit of that reservation.

The reservation of such an interest does not offend against the rule of perpetuity, or involve the laying down of a rule of succession varying the ordinary law. On the other hand it merely amounts to the cutting of a certain interest out of the property sold for a limited purpose, and the vendee becomes fully entitled to the whole, when the interest so created dies out. A SURENDRA RAM NARAYAN 326

Way, right of—Sale of land—Boundary described as pathway.

The purchaser of a piece of land, one boundary of which is given in the sale-deed "as a pathway," is entitled to a right of way over the pathway. MAKUPPANKAL v. MATHAN CHRISTIAN, 47 M. L. J. 477, (1924) A. I. R. (M) 834 430

Whipping Act (IV of 1909), s. 3—"Punishment," meaning of—Sentence of imprisonment or fine, if not be added to whipping.

The word "punishment" in section 3 of the Whipping Act means "the total of punishments awardable." In lieu of punishing an offender with imprisonment and fine, the Court may punish him with whipping but it cannot sentence him to whipping and also impose a fine. M. VARADARAJAN v. EMILIO, 20 L.
